US/EU marketing feedback: Buy-the-dip meets peak-cycle fears

We have spoken with ~60 clients across the U.S., Europe, and Asia since late July. We are seeing rising interest in both Korean and Chinese electrical equipment companies following the sharp pullback since 2Q, with investors looking to buy quality names on dips at ~20x 1-year forward P/E. Hyosung Heavy was the most frequently mentioned name in our meetings, as investors are comfortable with the outlook for margin expansion and planned capacity growth. Some investors are also interested in buying Chinese names on dips after 2Q results, including Wasion (10x 27E P/E, ~20% earnings CAGR) and TGOOD (where modular electrical solutions are gaining traction). However, we are hearing more pushback on the power capex-cycle thesis versus our global marketing trip last year; key concerns include potential overcapacity in power equipment, peaking new orders and margins, and delays in data-center and transmission build-outs (see note for our views). Investors generally prefer companies with exposure to high-voltage transmission equipment, given that the U.S. grid/utilities capex cycle can be decade-long and is less correlated with the pace of data-center build-outs. Looking ahead, we believe sequentially improving operating margins and higher U.S. earnings contribution from 3Q, along with earnings beats among global electrical peers, could gradually rebuild confidence in the sector and support share-price upside. We favor Hyosung Heavy, Hyundai Electric, and Wasion in Korea/China, while our regional colleagues in Japan/India have OW ratings on Hitachi/Mitsubishi Electric and Hitachi Energy India/GE Vernova T&D.

- What is the client interest level and sentiment now? We have sensed rising interest in both Korean and Chinese power equipment companies following their pullback since 2Q, as valuations have retreated to below 1x PEG, which in our view makes long-only investors more comfortable with the risk-reward trade-off. Interest has been particularly strong in Hyosung Heavy following its 2Q results, as the miss (see note) likely represents a clearing event; the investment thesis remains intact, and the stock could see sequential improvement from 3Q. Positioning in Korean power equipment names appears high among Europe-based EM funds, while we have sensed lighter positioning among U.S. global funds, given their broader opportunity set across global power equipment companies and existing exposure to large caps such as GE Vernova (GEV.US, covered by Mark Strouse, OW) and Siemens Energy (ENR.GY, covered by Phil Buller, OW). We also observe that some investors trimmed positions in Korean/Chinese power equipment names during the valuation peak in April/May and are now looking to re-accumulate quality names following the pullback.
- Which names gained most client traction during our trip? Korean power equipment companies continue to attract the most client interest among electrical names in the region. Hyosung Heavy is a consensus Buy among long-only investors, driven by its more ambitious capacity expansion plans and greater scope for margin expansion in the coming years. This is in stark contrast to our trip last week, when Hyundai Electric was still a key holding among international investors. Investors also like LS Electric, although they view the valuation as rich at current levels. In addition, investors are showing interest in select high-voltage transmission names in China as part of their EM exposure. We sensed very limited interest in utility names.

- What are the key debates right now? While investors were bullish on the power capex cycle during our global marketing last year, we have sensed more pushback on the sector thesis than before. Key investor questions include: (1) How sustainable is the capex cycle, and whether U.S. transmission demand and supply will reach equilibrium by the end of the decade; (2) what an appropriate mid-cycle margin level would be if supply tightness eases; (3) whether the QoQ decline in new orders for selected Korean names signals that the power capex cycle is peaking; (4) concerns about Western countries imposing restrictions on Chinese power equipment imports, following the recent U.S. ban on imports of certain new grid-connected power inverters (note); and (5) whether increasing behind-the-meter (BTM) adoption could reduce demand for transmission equipment.
- Our thoughts on the key debates: 1) On the sustainability of the power capex cycle, we believe developed-market grid capex growth can extend beyond 2030, supported by multiple U.S. power demand drivers (including electrification, AI, EV adoption, manufacturing reshoring) and the fact that the replacement cycle has yet to meaningfully kick in (our channel checks suggest replacement demand represents less than 20% of total). China's grid capex upcycle has lasted more than 10 years, whereas the U.S. appears to be at an earlier stage of grid capex growth, in our view; (2) on mid-cycle margins, we believe supply tightness for U.S. transmission equipment is unlikely to be resolved in the near to medium term; while price increases are moderating, we do not see significant room for T&D equipment prices to decline, and pricing and margins could remain supported for years. (3) The recent decline in orders is likely seasonal, with underlying demand still strong (HV equipment prices still rose QoQ, per HD Electric (note)). (4) We also see limited risk of Western countries imposing broad bans on Chinese T&D equipment imports, as Chinese players' market share in Western markets remains small and they do not currently lead on technology. Finally, behind-the-meter generation could create incremental demand for power equipment: as data centers increase in scale, more facilities may require transmission equipment at the >100kV level, in our estimates.
- Chinese power equipment: Investors interested in buying on dips post-2Q results: Interest in Chinese power equipment names was muted among EU and U.S. investors during 1H, but we observed rising interest during our marketing trip last week. Key feedback included: (1) the weak share performance in 1H was partly driven by sector rotation rather than fundamentals, and some investors view valuations for high-quality names as attractive at ~20x 1-year forward P/E; and (2) Chinese power equipment names have shown limited correlation with regional tech stocks, offering better diversification than the Korean names. In addition, these Chinese companies primarily export to emerging markets, which also provides geopolitical diversification. Overall, investors are looking to buy on dips after 2Q results, although they remain concerned about potential margin misses and subsequent earnings downgrades.
- What are the catalysts ahead? While investors are broadly constructive on the outlook for power equipment, the key question is what catalysts lie ahead. Our view is that: (1) strong earnings and order backlogs from global peers could gradually build confidence in the sector and support valuation upside; several electrical equipment companies have beaten expectations in the latest reporting cycle, including Siemens Energy (note), Caterpillar (CAT.US, covered by Tami Zkaria, OW, note), and Bloom Energy (BE.US, covered by Mark Strouse, OW, note); and (2) of a sequential earnings recovery, as both Hyosung and Hyundai Electric guided to a stronger U.S. earnings contribution in 2H on a sequential basis, implying improving revenue and margin momentum.
- Implications of 800V DC data center architecture: Numerous clients in the U.S./EU. asked whether our coverage could be vulnerable if data centers begin moving from traditional AC systems towards an 800V DC architecture. On this, we have published a deep-dive note on the sector implications and the involvement of Asian companies in the new power architecture. See the note for details.

Explanation of Equity Research Ratings, Designations and Analyst(s) Coverage Universe:

J.P. Morgan uses the following rating system: Overweight (over the duration of the price target indicated in this report, we expect this stock will outperform the average total return of the stocks in the Research Analyst’s, or the Research Analyst’s team’s, coverage universe); Neutral (over the duration of the price target indicated in this report, we expect this stock will perform in line with the average total return of the stocks in the Research Analyst’s, or the Research Analyst’s team’s, coverage universe); and Underweight (over the duration of the price target indicated in this report, we expect this stock will underperform the average total return of the stocks in the Research Analyst’s, or the Research Analyst’s team’s, coverage universe. NR is Not Rated. In this case, J.P. Morgan has removed the rating and, if applicable, the price target, for this stock because of either a lack of a sufficient fundamental basis or for legal, regulatory or policy reasons. The previous rating and, if applicable, the price target, no longer should be relied upon. An NR designation is not a recommendation or a rating. Some stocks under coverage have a rating but no price target; in these cases, we expect the stock will outperform/perform in line/underperform the average total return of the stocks in the Research Analyst's, or the Research Analyst's team's, coverage universe of the relevant duration of the region. In our Asia (ex-Australia and ex-India) and U.K. small- and mid-cap Equity Research, each stock's expected total return is compared to the expected total return of a benchmark country market index, not to those Research Analysts' coverage universe. If it does not appear in the Important Disclosures section of this report, the certifying Research Analyst's coverage universe can be found on J.P. Morgan's Research website, <https://www.jpmorganmarkets.com>.
