GE Vernova (GEV): Power Services - The gift that keeps on giving

Bottom line: While GEV's equipment backlog, orders, and the pace of data center demand drive the most investor attention, we believe the more durable source of value creation - the Power Services business - remains underappreciated. Besides being a significant value driver, the services business provides long term stability and durability, driving down the inherent cyclicalality associated with gas generation equipment.

We value GEV's Power Services business using a fleet-based build-up of the HA turbine installed fleet, and by estimating services demand across the legacy (non-HA) gas turbine fleet and the steam, nuclear, and hydro businesses. We estimate a $89B-$127B NPV, suggesting the Power Services business alone could be worth up to ~50% of GEV's current enterprise value (EV).

$23B-$33B of this estimated NPV, or 9-13% of GEV's current EV, is directly attributable to the long term services revenues attached to an eventual 526 unit HA fleet, GEV's flagship heavy-duty gas turbine platform. We expect the fleet to grow beyond the ~130 HA turbines commissioned as of Q2 26 due to strong demand for baseload power. HA turbine services revenues were ~$1B in FY 2025, and we estimate it could reach annual revenues of over $8B in the 2030s and 2040s. While attention is often focused on turbine equipment sales, the associated service revenues are realized over decades and are therefore harder to quantify, yet we think will become a significant contributor to future earnings.

The remaining $66B-$95B of NPV we attribute to the Legacy Power Services business, which we split between: (1) Steam/Hydro/Nuclear Power Services and (2) the Legacy (Non-HA) Gas Turbine Services. Within the Legacy Gas Turbine Services, we further segment service revenues across Long-Term Services Agreements (LTSA), Upgrades, and Transactional Services.

DETAILS

TAKEAWAYS

While turbine orders and equipment backlog dominate the investment narrative, our analysis suggests GEV's Power Services franchise alone could be worth up to 50% of the company's current enterprise value. The market's focus on equipment sales may be overlooking the long-duration, recurring service revenues generated by a growing installed fleet, which provides a highly visible stream of earnings and cash flow over decades. Services serves to smooth out an inherently cyclical equipment business.

Here we estimate the value of the Power Services franchise across its HA and Legacy Power Services Businesses:

EXHIBIT 1: In our base case, we apply an 8% discount rate, implying a total Power Services NPV of $127.5B

GEV's Enterprise Value ($mm)	$255,373
NPV of HA Turbine Services Business ($mm)	$32,529
NPV of Legacy Power Services Business ($mm)	$94,929
Total Power Services NPV	$127,458
% of EV	49.91%

EXHIBIT 2: Applying a more conservative 10% discount rate to our analysis implies that Power Services are worth ~35% of GEV's current EV

GEV's Enterprise Value ($mm)	$255,373
NPV of HA Turbine Services Business ($mm)	$23,472
NPV of Legacy Power Services Business ($mm)	$65,639
Total Power Services NPV	$89,111
% of EV	34.89%

HOW POWER SERVICES WORK: TRANSACTIONAL VS. LTSA

The Power Services business captures revenues from long-term services agreements (LTSAs), which are also referred to as contractual service agreements (CSAs), and from transactional servicing revenues. This spans the Gas, Steam, Nuclear and Hydro power units that fall under the segment.

Of their 7,000 unit gas installed fleet, 1,800 (26% of the fleet) are under LTSAs with a ~10 year average remaining life. The remaining units would be serviced on a transactional basis. Given that turbines are costly and technically complex, LTSAs reduce uncertainty around maintenance costs and outage risks for a customer.

Heavy-duty turbines tend to have LTSAs, where outages are more costly as they are relied upon for baseload power. For their H-Class turbines, which operate at a 290MW - 571MW capacity (next highest capacity turbine would be the F-Class at 201-294MW), we expect a very high (~90%) LTSA attachment rate.

While most HA turbines are expected to be covered by LTSAs, transactional maintenance can be lucrative because customers are highly sensitive to downtime. For large baseload turbines, the cost of an outage can far exceed the maintenance spend itself, supporting pricing power for OEM service providers.

UNDERSTANDING HA TURBINES

HA turbines are "high-efficiency, air cooled" turbines. It is GEV's modern H-class, heavy-duty gas-turbine platform. The H refers to the advanced high-temperature turbine class. The A distinguishes the air-cooled configuration from earlier steam-cooled H-class designs. The 7HA was built for 60 Hz grids, including the United States, while the 9HA was built for 50 Hz grids, common in Europe and many international markets. These turbines entered into commercial operation in 2016. As of Q2 2026, 130 units had been commissioned and 195 are under contract.

HA turbines are GE Vernova's highest-capacity and most efficient gas turbines, making them disproportionately likely to operate as baseload assets and therefore generate substantial long-term service revenue.

Source: Company Filings, Bernstein Analysis

Management's guidance implies HA turbine services revenue grows 4x between 2025 and 2035, while the HA installed fleet expands from 126 units to 400 units. At the same time, the legacy baseload fleet grows from an implied 150 GW to 200 GW, implying a ~3% CAGR on the legacy turbine side.

Further color on the HA Turbine Services Business:

- As of Q2 2026, 130 HA turbines were commissioned and 195 additional units were under contract (we count this as 199 units in our model since we begin at YE 2025 and want to account for the 4 delivered in H1 2026).
- Each GW of HA turbine will generate $0.5B over 20 years, assuming ~500MW a unit implies $0.25B a unit over 20 years.
- They expect 400 units / 200GW of HA machines running or on contract by YE 2027 (400 running by YE 2035).
- They expect $100B in future services revenue contracted by YE 2027.

Further color on the Legacy Power Services Business:

- As of YE 2025, there were ~7,000 commissioned turbines, of which ~1,800 (26%) are under an LTSA, with an average remaining life of 10 years. Excluding HA turbines this totals an estimated 1,674 legacy turbines under an LTSA. These total to ~8,000 GW of power (as of 2024 Investor Day).

HA TURBINE SERVICES MODELOUR HA TURBINE SERVICES ASSUMPTIONS

- 526 unit ultimate fleet (~263 GW): This represents +400 units running from today. There is high visibility on this number with 325 units (62% of 526) either already commissioned or under contract as of Q2 2026. With the commentary of 400 units running or on contract by YE 2027, this would only represent contracting 126 more units (+31%) from the end of next year. We view this as a conservative base case assumption.
- 20-year long-term service agreement (LTSA) contract duration
- 92% LTSA attach rate, 25% renewal rate after 20 years
- $250mm lifecycle service revenue per unit (informed by company commentary, and an assumption of ~500MW per HA unit)
- Major outages every 4 years
- 55% EBIT margins and 41.3% net income margins. We assume a 40% direct cost-to-serve ratio and 5% allocated SG&A burden, resulting in a 55% EBIT margin. Net income is used as a proxy for cash flow generation, implying a 41.3% cash flow margin after tax
- 8% Discount Rate, and 2.5% long-term Growth Rate

EXHIBIT 6: Our base case assumes a 526-unit HA fleet, a 92% LTSA attachment rate, and major outages every four years

LEGACY SERVICES MODEL

OUR LEGACY SERVICES ASSUMPTIONS

- 20% of non-HA turbine services revenues are attributable to Steam, Nuclear, and Hydro Services. This assumption is informed by management commentary that Gas Power represents approximately 80% of the broader Power segment, implying the remaining 20% is associated with Steam, Nuclear, and Hydro services activities.
- Remaining 80% of revenues are attributable to Legacy Gas Turbine Services. We further segment this revenue stream into LTSA's (60%), Transactional Services (30%), and Upgrades (10%), reflecting the recurring nature of the installed fleet services business and current LTSA penetration across the fleet.
- Steam, Nuclear, and Hydro Services grow at 4.8% annually. This assumes 2% growth for Steam and Hydro, 4% growth for Nuclear, and 2.5% annual pricing, with the segment comprising ~50% Steam and 25% each Nuclear and Hydro.
- Legacy Gas Turbine Upgrade Services grow at 9.0% annually. This assumes 6.5% underlying growth and 2.5% pricing, reflecting increased demand for uprates, efficiency improvements, and life-extension projects across the existing fleet. The company commented on higher upgrade demand driving at least 50% growth from FY 2025-2030.
- Legacy Gas Turbine Transactional Services grow at 4.5% annually. This assumes 2.0% underlying growth and 2.5% pricing, growing slightly slower than the implied baseload CAGR of 3%.
- Legacy Gas Turbine LTSA revenues grow at 5.5% annually. This assumes 3.0% underlying growth and 2.5% pricing. The underlying growth rate is informed by management's baseload framework, which implies the non-HA fleet grows from approximately 150 GW to 200 GW between FY 2025-35, corresponding to a ~3% CAGR.
- 35% EBIT margins and 26.3% net income margins. We assume a 55% direct cost-to-serve ratio and 10% allocated SG&A burden, resulting in a 35% EBIT margin. Net income is used as a proxy for cash flow generation, implying a 26.3% cash flow margin after tax.
- 8% Discount Rate, and 2.5% LT Growth Rate.

SUMMARY

While investor attention remains focused on gas turbine orders, backlog growth, and the pace of data center driven power demand, we believe the more durable source of value creation at GEV lies within its Power Services business. Our analysis suggests Power Services alone is worth $89B-$127B, equivalent to roughly 35-50% of GEV's current enterprise value, even before assigning value to future equipment sales beyond our assumptions.

More importantly, every incremental turbine sold today expands an installed base that can generate recurring service revenues for decades. As the HA fleet grows from approximately 130 commissioned units today, with 195 additional units already under contract, service revenues should become an increasingly important contributor to earnings, cash flow, and valuation.

In our view, the market continues to value GEV primarily as a power equipment company at a time when it is increasingly becoming an end-to-end power and electrification equipment company with a large and growing services business attached. As investors gain greater confidence in the scale and durability of these future service cash flows, we believe the Power Services business will become a more prominent component of the investment narrative and a key support for the stock's premium valuation.
