Apple Suppliers: Dual Tailwinds from AI and Apple's Upgrade Cycle

Major Product Upgrade Supports Apple Ecosystem Demand: During Apple's "Surprise and Shine" event, Apple unveiled its latest product lineup, including the iPhone Duo, its first foldable iPhone. While announcements were largely in line with expectations, they reinforce our Technology analysts' constructive demand outlook. The iPhone Duo combines a consumer-friendly design, latest technology with new form factor, and competitive pricing, while continued premiumization through higher-end storage options and Pro-model price increases should support ASP growth and product mix.

Apple Remains a Key Driver of Taiwan Equities: Apple suppliers account for 55% of Taiwan market cap, 36% of ADVT, and 50% of aggregate sales, equivalent to ~13% effective market cap exposure and 14% sales exposure to Apple (Exhibit 1). Our Technology analysts continue to expect premium smartphones to gain share of both industry shipments and revenue (Exhibit 2), while the new product cycle could support a recovery in Apple revenue growth and iPhone shipments in 2027 amid a subdued consumer demand environment, providing an additional earnings tailwind for suppliers alongside continued AI-related demand (Exhibit 3).

AI and Product Innovation Provide Dual Growth Drivers: Taiwan Apple suppliers have significantly outperformed historical seasonality on AI-driven gains YTD. Historically, major Apple product upgrade cycles have been associated with stronger supplier performance (Exhibit 4), and the current cycle could see further upside amid an ongoing earnings upgrade trend (Exhibit 6).

The Asian "Apple Trade": We highlight our rebalanced Taiwan Apple Suppliers basket <GSSZAPPL>, comprising 25 stocks with at least 10% revenue exposure to Apple (37% weighted average) and strong empirical linkages to Apple's earnings, sales, and share-price performance (Exhibit 9). The basket trades at 15x forward 24-month P/E with 59%/47% consensus EPS growth for 2026/27E, compared with Apple's 30x P/E on 16%/10% growth (Exhibit 7).

Constructive Taiwan Market View: We remain Overweight Taiwan in our Asia market allocation and recently raised our TAIEX target to 54,000, implying 17% upside, supported by stronger tech-led earnings expectations and attractive PEG-based valuations.
