MediaTek: Rapid ramp into a bigger ASIC market; Outperform

We raise price target to NT$5,500, and reiterate MediaTek is the Top Pick of our coverage.

We revise up our MediaTek ASIC revenue forecast to US$2/16/44B in 2026/27/28.

The first project (TPU v8t) is well in mass production & MediaTek enjoys the fungibility of shifting wafer capacity from other chips to this project. The 2nd project (TPU v9) will be packaged with EMIB-T. Substrate thus will be the most critical bottleneck but fortunately at least three substrate suppliers have been mobilized. That plus higher tech complexity & higher ASP explains why we model a major revenue jump from 2027 to 2028.

Share gain in a much larger ASIC market. Inputs from Marvell, GUC, Alchip & most importantly from Broadcom make us now model the data center XPU ASIC market to be US $250-300B in 2028, up from US$140-160B before. We expect MediaTek to gain share at Google, & the additional demand from Anthropic, OpenAI, Amazon, etc. should make this market much bigger & benefit many.

More vying for Google's business, but MediaTek is competitive & may enter other customers. Many are trying to win some of Google's v10 business (with production in 2029), but MediaTek is competitive with its scale, track record, tech/IP breadth, cost & sourcing capabilities to defend its share at Google & likely also win projects beyond Google.

Partnership with NVIDIA is an upside risk to our forecast. We've not modeled the upside from the PC & auto & the extension to "AI infrastructure" may make selling chassis/racks/sub-systems a new revenue stream that we are yet to model too. Details in this report.

Raising price target to NT$5,500 on 18x 1-year forward P/E. Mindful of the competition in v10, we lower our valuation from 22x to 18x P/E but the higher EPS allows us to raise price target to NT$5,500. We're 20-40% above consensus on 2027 & 2028 EPS.

Investment Implications

Outperform, with price target of NT$5,500. MediaTek is the Top Pick of our coverage.

DETAILS

We revise up the projection for MediaTek's ASIC revenue for 2027 & even more for 2028.

- The mass production of the first project (TPU v8t) is well underway and, we believe, achieves satisfactory test results. That may explain why MediaTek's monthly revenue accelerated significantly in August (Exhibit 1) & we also model MediaTek to meet the guidance of more than US$2B, and generate US$2.4B from ASIC business this year (Exhibit 3).
- For 2027, how much ASIC can contribute is determined mostly by the capacity that MediaTek can secure from TSMC this project. Considering the fungibility of shifting wafer capacity from other businesses to ASIC, we believe it is CoWoS capacity being the critical bottleneck and together with the input from Google (GOOGL.US, covered by Bernstein US Internet team), MediaTek has secured sufficient capacity to deliver US$16B in 2027.
- 2028's revenue contribution should be mostly from the second project (TPU v9) (Exhibit 2) whose scale hinges on the supply & hence yield of EMIB-T. As this chip is much more complex than the prior chips packaged with EMIB, we remain mindful of the execution risk, but were happy to learn that at least three substrate suppliers have been mobilized to prepare capacity for it. Ibiden (4062.JP, covered by Bernstein Japan Semi team) is the most experienced, and we believe Shinko (no longer listed) is progressing well in substrate yield too. Unimicron (3037.TT, covered by Bernstein Asia Tech Hardware team) is still learning, but there is still a year to make yield better before the mass production starts in late 2027. Considering the possible substrate supply and the much higher complexity & hence much higher ASP than v8t's, we model MediaTek's revenue to jump significantly to US$44B in 2028. ASIC business is expected to account for 65% of MediaTek's total revenue & 68% of its corporate EPS then (Exhibit 4 - Exhibit 5).

EXHIBIT 2: We expect MediaTek’s 2026 & 2027 ASIC revenue will be contributed by TPU v8t, and its 2028 ASIC revenue to be mostly from TPU v9.

We expect MediaTek will be gaining share quickly and at the same time Anthropic, OpenAI, etc. make the ASIC market much bigger.

- With the revision above, we now project MediaTek to have HSD% of the data center XPU ASIC market this year, high-teens% in 2027 & mid-20s % in 2028 (Exhibit 7). Many will find this confusing as competitors, especially Broadcom, also guided very robust growth from this market. We believe the reason is the market is simply bigger.

- We incorporate the commentary from Marvell (MRVL.US, not covered), and the inputs from GUC and Alchip (3443.TT & 3661.TT, both not covered) learned from our recent visit to SEMICON Taiwan, but it is largely the latest guidance from Broadcom (AVGO.US, covered by Bernstein US Semi team) that makes us now model a much bigger ASIC market. Though we model MediaTek to gain share within Google, Broadcom's projects for Anthropic and OpenAI (both not listed) are apparently large enough to keep Broadcom on a growth trajectory too. Exhibit 6 compare our prior & current projection. We now basically expect the market to rise to nearly US$150B one year earlier in 2027, and then further grow to US$250-300B in 2028. Please note MediaTek and some other suppliers don't have HBM as part of their ASIC revenues, but Broadcom on the other hand includes that. To present a like-for-like comparison, we estimate the HBM value and include that in our market size and market share projection. Please also note though some include merchant silicon (e.g. networking chips) in the definition of "AI revenue", our definition excludes that as they are not tailored-made and hence not ASIC. Our definition also does not include custom CPU but we will incorporate that once we gain sufficient visibility.

Google may add more suppliers later but MediaTek can also win customers beyond Google.

- It appears that Google is casting a wide net for the supply of custom silicon in 2029. We tentatively call this is v10 generation and believe that MediaTek, Broadcom, Alchip, & GUC are in discussions with Google for some projects in this generation. AMD (AMD.US, covered by Bernstein US Semi team) reportedly can be another one, and we won't be surprised that Marvell tries to gain traction in this generation too, after winning an LPU (language-process unit)-based project already.
- We agree that as AI & hence ASIC deployment scale becomes very large, it warrants specialization to optimize chips for different workloads. We thus see the possibility of Google enlisting multiple ASIC suppliers for multiple projects in the v10 generation. We believe Google will weigh its needs against the proposals submitted by these possible suppliers and come to a decision likely late this year or early 2027, so that the chosen suppliers have sufficient time (c. 2 years) to the projected production in 2029.
- Hence, we may see Google enlisting suppliers beyond Broadcom, MediaTek & Marvell and competition becomes more severe for Google's business. On the other hand, the same reason should prompt Microsoft (MSFT.US, covered by Bernstein Global Software team), Meta (META.US, covered by Bernstein US Internet team), xAI (SPCX.US, covered by Bernstein Aerospace & Defense team) and more importantly Anthropic & OpenAI to broaden their supplier base too. MediaTek is in discussions with several of them, and we believe is well positioned to win some projects beyond Google too.

- We see this a natural evolution - the strong economic benefit of ASIC attracts more customers & makes the AI ASIC market size bigger. That in turn encourages more suppliers to enter the market and competition inevitably will arise. For MediaTek, first investors worrying about the possible share loss in v10 should consider the possible share gains at other customers. More importantly, given MediaTek's scale, breadth of technologies & IPs, cost structure, track record (projects for Sony (6758.JP, co-covered by Bernstein Japan Semi and Global Video Gaming team), Microsoft, Cisco (CSCO.US, not covered), etc. previously, & TPU v8t and 9 soon) and sourcing capabilities, we think MediaTek is structurally well positioned to capture a meaningful market share in a very large AI ASIC market.

The partnership with NVIDIA extending to "AI infrastructure" presents another opportunity that we're yet to model.

- As analyzed in this report, MediaTek & NVIDIA extended their collaboration from PC & automotive previously to include "AI infrastructure" now. This strategically positions MediaTek as a bridge connecting NVIDIA's ecosystem with ASIC's. Practically we believe this is similar to the "reference design" that MediaTek offers in smartphone business, and MediaTek will provide "prebuilt, pre-qualified and system pre-validated" foundation to accelerate the development from silicon to rack-scale system while ensuring the compatibility with NVIDIA's ecosystem through NVLink Fusion. This is particularly attractive to customers who are new to ASIC, and MediaTek can monetize it through either 1) more ASIC project wins, 2) higher ASIC margins, or 3) selling chassis/racks/sub-systems to customers. We note the strategic importance of this extended partnership, but will model its upside to MediaTek when we have better visibility later. In fact, we also have not modeled the benefits from the partnership in PC & automotive yet. All three therefore are an upside risk to our projection.
- Additionally, NVIDIA and Google will soon hold the convertible bonds of MediaTek, and likely the equity of MediaTek later. This solidifies the relationship between MediaTek and both, in our view, but still allows MediaTek to work with other customers as the maximal equity share held by Google will be only 0.2%.

We raise price target to NT$5,500 on 18x 1-year forward P/E and reiterate Outperform.

- We nudge up our forecast for the overall 2026 smartphone shipment from dropping 15% to 13.5% YoY as (1) 1H26 sales volume turned out to be more resilient than expected & (2) supply chain inventory delays handset price hike and thus some end demand destruction to 2027 (Exhibit 8). That said, share gain in the mid-tier segment would make MediaTek outperform the overall Android camp. The deeper hit to the low-end segment also improves the mix. Net-net, we now forecast MediaTek's Smartphone revenue to decline by 18% in 2026, and recover gradually in 2027 & 2028 (Exhibit 9).
- On the other hand, stronger-than-expected Smart Edge business should partially mitigate the mobile phone weakness. Share gain across connectivity, computing & autos segments should support Smart Edge revenue to growth c. 20% YoY this year, and deliver low-teens % CAGR in 2027-2028. Meanwhile, successful pass-through of high memory cost makes gross margin more resilient than expected (Exhibit 11).
- Our revenue projection is largely in line with consensus for 2026 & 2027, and c. 10% above for 2028, primarily driven by optimistic assumption on the second TPU project. We now forecast MediaTek's ASIC revenue to reach US$2B/16B/44B in 2026/27/28, respectively & account for 65% of the total revenue by 2028. Our gross margin estimates are broadly in line with consensus. However, we forecast stronger operating leverage on lower opex but more importantly on higher revenue. As a result, we expect EPS to more than double YoY to NT$169 in 2027 and further rise to NT$369 in 2028, making us 20-40% above consensus (Exhibit 14).
- Acknowledging the competitive landscape for Google's business could be less clear in 2029, we lower our valuation to 18x from 22x previously and set our price target at NT$5,500 (Exhibit 13). As that presents 20% upside as of Sept. 11 and dividend will add another 1%, we reiterate Outperform.

EXHIBIT 13: MediaTek is now trading at 39x forward P/ E. We believe the rapid growth driven by AI ASIC business will digest the valuation.
