F1Q27 Preview – A Good Set-Up into Results, But Still A Long Road Ahead

WHAT'S CHANGED

Oracle Corporation (ORCL.N)	From	To
Price Target	$207.00	$210.00

We see an attractive tactical set-up into F1Q27: our assessment of the GPUaaS ramp supports cloud growth near the high end of guide, checks point to stabilizing Cloud Apps and improving multicloud DB momentum, while valuation leaves room for upside if OCI execution is proven.

Key Takeaways

- Tactical set-up: shares -25%+ since 4Q26, ~14x FY28E Cons NGAAP EPS; modest FY27 raise could drive upside if OCI delivers.
- Back-of-envelope GPUaaS ramp supports ~63% cloud growth, near high end of 58-64% guide, as FY26 capacity monetizes and ~1GW is added in 1Q.
- Neocloud prints are directionally bullish for GPUaaS pricing & contract economics; more pre-pay/BYOC deals could also ease funding/credit concerns.
- Checks support Cloud Apps stability and stronger multicloud DB momentum, but OCI remains the key post-print stock driver.
- Remain EW as we look to build more conviction in long term execution; raise PT to $210 (from $207) on revised estimates.

Too Early To Dream The Dream, But Valuation Creates Attractive Tactical Set Up if Execution Can Be Proven Out. Oracle shares are down -25%+ relative to 4Q26 results, and now trading at ~14x consensus FY28E NGAAP EPS (~17x GAAP P/E), as investors look to build more conviction in ORCL's ability to execute on its pivot to GPUaaS, following 4Q26 results in which FY27 revenue and EPS guidance underwhelmed relative to expectations, with capex guidance (on a gross / reported basis) surprising slightly to the upside. These concerns have been compounded, albeit to a lesser degree, by the underwhelming growth trajectory in the core Cloud Applications business seen in the 2H of FY26 (namely in Fusion and Netsuite). While proving out execution will likely take several quarters of strong results, we see a tactically positive set up into 1Q27 results given intra-quarter share performance and current valuation. Specifically, (1) we see potential for GPUaaS to drive Cloud Revenue towards the high end of the guide at ~63% YoY (vs. 58%-64% guide, (Exhibit 1) as capacity added in FY26 scales to run rate monetization, complemented by incremental monetization from the 'nearly' 1GW of capacity expected to be brought on-line in Q1. (2) Bullish reads from recent neocloud prints, seeing potential for ORCL to benefit either directly from stronger pricing on new contracts, or alternatively, via incremental pre-pay/BYOC contracts (helping to ease concerns on the credit side). (3) Stability in Cloud Applications revenue growth, given two consecutive quarters of deferred revenue growth outpacing reported revenue growth, and constructive channel checks. Should this play out, we'd expect a modest upward revision to FY27 revenue and EPS, which given investor sentiment, should be enough to drive a positive reaction. What could go wrong? Beyond a weaker OCI print, we think the two risk factors on the quarter are (a) weaker than expected gross margins on account of OCI capacity ramp and (b) an upward revision to capex.

See Scope for Stronger Performance in Total Cloud Revenue, Driven by GPUaaS.

Oracle's F1Q27 guidance calls for 58%-64% YoY (57%-63% cc) growth in total cloud revenue in 1Q. Assuming stable / slightly improved growth in the Cloud business (ex GPUaaS), this implies ~$1.5bn of sequential dollars added to OCI to hit the midpoint, and ~$7.3bn of total OCI revenue. While this screens aggressive from a headline perspective, rough math implies that performance towards the high end of the guided range is not out of the question. On GPUaaS, we think this implies ~1.6GW of power being monetized at run rate, assuming $10bn of ARR/GW (consistent with illustrative contract economics at the October 2025 Analyst Day). Applying this math to our 4Q26 estimate implies ~1.1GW of power at run-rate monetization exiting FY26, slightly below the 1.2GW+ management indicated having delivered in FY26. The company also outlined expectations to deliver nearly 1GW of capacity in 1Q27 alone. If we assume that the residual difference between the estimated 4Q26 exit scales to run rate in 1Q27, and that half of the 1Q27 capacity is also monetized at run rate, we see scope for ORCL to post cloud revenue towards the high end of guidance, coming in closer to 63% YoY.

Bullish Neocloud Prints Directionality Positive For ORCL GPUaaS into F1Q...

CRWV and NBIS both gave bullish AI infrastructure pricing commentary on their latest prints. CRWV cited a 5-10ppt higher contribution margin on 2Q-signed contracts and a ~25% price increase across SKUs on strong demand, plus older-generation chip ASPs holding at levels seen ~1Y ago. NBIS echoed this: a) mid-term contracts (~1-3Y) yielding ~$20-$25M/MW vs the ~$10M/MW implied by ORCL's illustrative contract economics at the Oct '25 Analyst Day; b) <6mo contracts trending to $40-$50M/MW and higher in some cases; and c) its first capacity auction in Q2 clearing at the highest Blackwell-generation prices to date, 15% above prior peak. NBIS added Q2 deals above $20m/MW with sub-two-year paybacks come online from late Q4 and "can serve as the baseline for pricing early next year."

...However, ORCL indicated at 4Q26 earnings that 98% of its AI Datacenter capacity is contracted. We are unsure how much of the broader 10GW ambition that references, or over what duration, and as a result – lean conservative on whether the inflection in AI capacity pricing can emerge as a material near-term upside driver for ORCL. Still, we would expect longer-dated capacity and contracts signed intra-quarter to see similar dynamics, potentially showing up in mid-CY27 results. Separately, the bullish pricing data points also suggest that ORCL can continue to expand its RPO base of pre-pay/BYOC GPUaaS contracts (~$75bn as of 4Q26), which depending on scale, could incrementally ease credit/funding concerns ahead of greater FCF yield post FY28.

In-Line SaaS Prints Drove Positive Reactions; Directionally Supportive For ORCL,But OCI Still The Driver.

In Signs of Life: Making the Case That SaaS Is ALIVE (3 Sep 2026), we showed that large-cap application SaaS names posting CY27 revenue revisions of +/-1% following CY2Q26 results outperformed the broader software group by an average 18% over the subsequent five days, against 4% underperformance on comparable revisions a year prior. WDAY illustrates the point: a largely in-line quarter (revenue +0.5% vs consensus) drove a +5.8% 1-day move, with CRM (+0.1% vs consensus) up +22.6%. We attribute this to depressed starting valuations, with group EV/FCF entering the season ~60% below the 3Y average, and to the AI bear case not yet showing up in results – despite little evidence of fundamental reacceleration. We do not see any reason that ORCL shouldn't also benefit from a similar dynamic, but remain of view that the investor focus remains squarely on the trajectory of OCI. Put another way, in-line / slight upside to cloud results is not enough on its own to drive a positive post print reaction, but should be complementary if OCI delivers.

What We Heard in Checks:

Channel partners spoke to stability in Cloud Applications, complemented by broad based optimism with respect to ORCL's ramping multicloud database capability. Importantly, we did not pick up on any material disruption in channel engagement following the large scale RIF implemented earlier this year. Anecdotally, we also heard that ORCL is gaining traction for AI workloads in select enterprise verticals – an area we have leaned more cautious. While too early to give credit, this is something we will continue to monitor.

- (+) Multicloud Database Commentary Positive. Across conversations with the channel, Database@Azure / AWS / GCP consistently came up as increasing activity, with two saying partners indicating broader availability is pulling some customers from evaluation into migration earlier than otherwise. One partner with visibility into live deployments called Exadata in the hyperscalers among the strongest parts of its Oracle business, putting activity past awareness and pilots. We would still distinguish this from broad OCI share gains; the opportunity is protecting and expanding Oracle's Database wallet. Still, multicloud was the most consistent positive signal in our work and the strongest support for improving Cloud Database growth in coming quarters. While we continue to embed more modest growth in Cloud Database relative to the multiyear targets, this is an area we lean constructive and look to give more credit as acceleration is proven out.

- (+/-) Cloud Applications Commentary Largely Indicative of Stability. After 2FY26's Fusion and NetSuite modest deceleration, our checks provided some evidence conditions are becoming less negative. One partner cited improving qualified Fusion ERP and HCM discussions, including renewed evaluations from customers weighing SAP S/4HANA migration cost and complexity. A reseller-oriented check was more cautious, citing limited new-logo activity and a pipeline supported partly by multiyear renewals. SAP's ECC support extension also appears to have deferred part of the forced-decision catalyst that could have benefited Fusion, though selected customers still weigh Oracle against a costly S/4HANA migration. Commentary on embedded application AI also screen muted, with moderate adoption of native functionality and one check seeing customers favor custom agents on external foundation models. However, with checks indicative of stability, and ORCL having seen two consecutive quarters of deferred revenue growth ahead of reported Cloud Applications revenue, we lean constructive on the potential for improved growth to materialize in FY27.
- (+/-) Core OCI Remains Anchored to Oracle Workloads, While Enterprise AI Adds Early Optionality. Conversations focused on continued lift-and-shift and modernization work, anecdotal evidence of greater mid-market focus and no material deterioration in Oracle's engagement with large partners. Partners also reported no meaningful difficulty provisioning conventional compute or database workloads – suggesting ORCL has not run into major capacity issues intra-quarter (excluding GPUaaS, where partner visibility is far more limited). Less established is whether OCI is becoming a broad strategic hyperscaler for workloads without an Oracle anchor: one check said generic storage, networking and compute for custom applications still typically land elsewhere, with another indicating that greenfield data and AI-platform projects often favor competitors such as Databricks (private), Snowflake, Postgres or MongoDB. On AI infrastructure, two checks pointed to improving enterprise interest from an early base. One large-deal partner called its visible AI-native pipeline inference-weighted, with recently signed capacity generally online during 2027; a large GSI sees more financial-services and pharmaceutical customers evaluating OCI as an enterprise "AI factory," driven partly by proximity to existing Oracle data, though GPU work remains a small share of activity. Pricing, availability and database proximity appear the most tangible differentiators.

Changes to Our Model: With this preview, we are updating our estimates for 4-Q26 results, and extending the forecast horizon to include FY29 and FY30. On topline, our estimates remain largely unchanged through the forecast horizon (with FY29/FY30 consistent with prior SOTP work). While FY27 EPS moves ~3% higher (primarily via below the line items), our FY28 NGAAP EPS estimates increase ~20% to $9.94 (vs. A-Day guide of ~$10.70 / consensus of $10.76), primarily on account of giving credit for ~200bps of YoY expansion in implied GPUaaS gross margins, reaching ~19% in FY28 (directionality consistent with management commentary for YoY improvement). This compares to our prior estimate of ~12%, which was based on the output of our prior GPUaaS model, and reflected was a primarily function of the mismatch implied by the timing disclosure associated with ORCL's un-commenced lease balance relative to our revenue implied capacity footprint forecast (see: Oracle Corporation: Computing the Upside – And the Cost \(23 Apr 2026\)). While we remain of the view that there is meaningful execution risk embedded in ORCL's multi year outlook, we think it is more reasonable to be anchoring closer to our FY27 estimate given the implied improvement seen in GPUaaS margins through FY26. However, we plan to re-asses the trajectory in more detail post Q1 results. Opex estimates remain in the LSD% growth range post FY27. On capex, FY27 comes lower to reflect the high end of management's guidance on a gross/net basis, FY28 unchanged, and modest upward revision to FY29/FY30 (to ~$62bn/$59bn, relative to our prior forecast of ~$56bn/$53bn, respectively).

Remain EW, $210 PT (from $207). While our EPS estimates move higher on account of improved GPUaaS gross margin trajectory discussed above, we are slightly increasing our PT to $210 (from $207 previously) using ~19x CY28e NGAAP EPS of $10.98. This implies a ~0.9x PEG (CY26-CY28 CAGR), a discount to ORCL's historical average of ~1.6x given execution risk and lack of FCF support through forecast period given GPUaaS investment. Our revised PT compares to our prior base case of $207, which reflected 25x FY28e NGAAP EPS of $8.28.

EQUAL-WEIGHT THESIS

- Our assessment of the underlying drivers within Oracle's FY30 targets suggest a) acceleration is expected in other areas of the business (e.g. SaaS, core OCI) b) substantial operating leverage and c) favorable outcomes in financing its infrastructure build out.
- While robust RPO provides visibility towards achievement of $225 billion of FY30 revenue, magnitude and duration of GPUaaS investment cycle remain highly uncertain, as do longer term economics -- particularly given mounting balance sheet obligations.
- Given the importance of execution across numerous vectors, we see a balanced risk reward on shares at current levels.

Morgan Stanley uses a relative rating system using terms such as Overweight, Equal-weight, Not-Rated or Underweight (see definitions below). Morgan Stanley does not assign ratings of Buy, Hold or Sell to the stocks we cover. Overweight, Equal-weight, Not-Rated and Underweight are not the equivalent of buy, hold and sell. Investors should carefully read the definitions of all ratings used in Morgan Stanley Research. In addition, since Morgan Stanley Research contains more complete information concerning the analyst's views, investors should carefully read Morgan Stanley Research, in its entirety, and not infer the contents from the rating alone. In any case, ratings (or research) should not be used or relied upon as investment advice. An investor's decision to buy or sell a stock should depend on individual circumstances (such as the investor's existing holdings) and other considerations.
