Estun Automation - A

From margin success to growth challenge—cutting PT to Rmb21, downgrade to UW

Estun's journey over the past year has been defined by a decisive pivot from chasing volume to prioritizing margin quality and cash flow, a strategy that has delivered on profitability but now faces a new set of challenges. After outperforming the CSI300 by c.25% YTD, the stock has reversed sharply since its early July peak, with the July 2 announcement of the Codroid humanoid robot asset injection (see our note) failing to reignite momentum. We believe the recent price decline reflects a market that is recalibrating expectations: Estun's margin gains have come at the expense of revenue and order growth, while competitive pressure from KUKA and a more cautious industry outlook are raising the bar for future performance. With net margin already at 4.7%—near our view of a short-term ceiling—and exports unlikely to provide a breakthrough, we lower our PT to Rmb21 and downgrade to UW, as the market transitions to a more normalized growth and valuation framework.

- Estun's margin expansion and disciplined strategy have delivered, but the trade-off is a visible slowdown in revenue and order momentum. Management's focus on quality over quantity—walking away from low-margin and long receivable-day business—has made Estun more resilient and improved Op-CF, which turned positive at Rmb191MM in 1H26. Net margin reached 4.7% and consolidated GPM improved to c.33%, but 2Q26 revenue was up just 4% Y/Y despite healthy shipment volumes. The company's full-year shipment target remains c.45k units globally, but the ability to deliver top-line growth alongside margin gains is now in question. The market is now less willing to pay for future robotics optionality, especially as the sector faces a broader de-rating and investors demand more evidence of scalable, profitable growth.
- KUKA's rapid market share gains and Midea's strategic push in robotics are raising the bar for all domestic players, including Estun. KUKA, now owned by Midea (000333 CH; OW; covered by DS Kim), has reached a 9.7% domestic market share in 1H26, just behind Estun's 9.9%, and is investing heavily in local manufacturing and supply chain integration. KUKA's new base in China, with a planned capacity of 80-100k units per year and 85% core component localization, is set to further improve its cost structure and competitiveness. Midea's broader ToB and overseas ambitions, with penetration into new applications such as welding robots and AI-related end demand markets, are also progressing well. This means that Estun faces a much tougher environment for defending and growing share. The risk is that Estun's previous strategy of aggressive volume and market share growth is running out of steam just as the competitive landscape becomes more challenging.
- Industry growth is moderating, and the market is entering a new phase where differentiation and solution capability matter more. MIR Databank's latest data show that China's industrial robot market grew 17% Y/Y in 2Q26, with 1H26 shipments at 188,612 units, but the full-year forecast suggests that 2H26E growth is expected to slow. Summary Investment Thesis and Valuation

Investment Thesis

We have an UW rating on Estun, a leading domestic provider of servo systems and industrial robots in China which sets itself apart from its domestic robot-making peers through a highly integrated business model. Estun's journey over the past year has been defined by a decisive pivot from chasing volume to prioritizing margin quality and cash flow, a strategy that has delivered on profitability but now faces a new set of challenges. Estun's margin gains have come at the expense of revenue and order growth, while competitive pressure from KUKA and a more cautious industry outlook are raising the bar for future performance. Net margin is already at 4.7%—near our view of a short-term ceiling—and exports are unlikely to provide a breakthrough.

Valuation

Our Dec-27 PT of Rmb21 is based on a FY27E P/S multiple of 3x, which is roughly aligned with the average of its industrial robot global peers including Fanuc, Yaskawa and ABB, based on Bloomberg consensus estimates.

players are intensifying competition, launching new products, and focusing on cost and solution selling. End-customers are increasingly demanding integrated solutions, fast delivery, and strong after-sales support. For Estun, this means that simply growing volume is no longer enough; the company will need to continue innovating and building on its strengths in quality and service to stand out in a more mature, price-competitive market. The company's accumulating installed base and after-sales platform remain positives, but the environment is more challenging.

- Model update: We cut our FY26-28E forecasts by up to 15% for both revenue and net profit. Revising down by 4%, we now assume FY26E revenue growth at 8% Y/Y, implying a ~15% Y/Y growth in 2H26E, which appears more achievable, in our view, given the competition is more on comprehensive total solution ability and in-house manufacturing against competitors like KUKA. We think Estun is still on its way to finding the next major growth drivers to offset the impact of business re-calibration out of low-margin business. We also lower our FY27-28E sales forecasts by 9% and 14%, due to limited visibility into a re-acceleration. Keeping our margin assumptions largely unchanged, we cut our earnings forecasts by up to 15% during our forecast period.

Downgrade to UW: Margin gains delivered, but growth and competitive headwinds

We are updating our model for Estun and downgrading the stock to UW, with a new price target of Rmb21, which implies c.30% downside from current levels. Estun announced the asset injection of its humanoid robot subsidiary Codroid on July 2, but the stock has fallen since then. We believe the price decline reflects two main factors: first, Estun's growth momentum has eased from both order and revenue perspectives, as seen in the 2Q26 results, partly due to rising competitive pressure from KUKA, owned by Midea (000333 CH; OW; covered by DS Kim) and management's calibrated choices to walk away from unprofitable orders; second, the broader market is de-rating future growth stories like humanoid robots, as investors de-risk and focus more on near-term fundamentals. Our new PT translates to c.60x P/E and c.3x P/S FY2027E, a reset from the c.4–6x P/S and c.100–120x P/E multiples Estun enjoyed in recent years when revenue and order growth were c.20% and margin expansion was still a forward-looking story. Now, with margin gains finally delivered in 1H26 but at the expense of top-line momentum, we see a more challenging outlook ahead.

The Codroid asset injection was meant to broaden Estun's growth narrative, but the market reaction has been negative as investors focus on near-term growth headwinds.

Estun's July 2 announcement of the Codroid asset injection was positioned as a strategic move to capture new opportunities in humanoid and collaborative robots, with management highlighting the potential for long-term product and technology synergies. However, the stock has declined since the announcement, as investors have shifted their attention to the company's slowing order and revenue growth, and the realization that near-term financial contributions from Codroid are likely to be limited. The market is now less willing to pay up for future robotics optionality, especially as the sector faces a broader de-rating and investors demand more evidence of scalable, profitable growth.

Estun's margin expansion has been delivered, but the trade-off has been a visible slowdown in revenue and order momentum.

In 1H26, Estun's net margin reached 4.7% and consolidated GPM improved to c.33%, with Op-CF turning positive at Rmb191MM. Management's focus on quality over quantity—walking away from low-margin and long receivable-day business—has made the company more resilient and improved cash flow. However, this discipline has also resulted in a sharp deceleration in revenue growth, with 2Q26 revenue up just 4% Y/Y despite healthy shipment volumes. The company's full-year shipment target remains c.45k units globally, but the ability to deliver top-line growth alongside margin gains is now in question, especially as competitive pressure from KUKA intensifies.

KUKA's rapid market share gains and Midea's strategic push in robotics are raising the bar for all domestic players, including Estun.

KUKA, now owned by Midea, has reached a 9.7% domestic market share in 1H26, just behind Estun's 9.9%, and is investing heavily in local manufacturing and supply chain integration. KUKA's new base in China, with a planned capacity of 80–100k units per year and 85% core component localization, is set to further improve its cost structure and competitiveness. Midea's broader ToB and overseas ambitions, as well as accelerating penetration into new applications such as welding robots and AI-related end demand markets. This means that Estun faces a much tougher environment for defending and growing share. The risk is that Estun's previous strategy of aggressive volume and market share growth is running out of steam just as the competitive landscape becomes more challenging.

Cloos integration adds technical depth, but near-term financial impact is limited and execution risk is rising.

Estun's acquisition and integration of Cloos has expanded its reach in welding automation and collaborative robots, and provided access to a more global customer base, with management highlighting technical synergies and the potential for cross-selling. However, the near-term financial contribution from Cloos remains modest, and the integration process brings added complexity at a time when the core business is already facing competitive and margin pressures. Investors will want to see clearer evidence that Cloos can deliver not just technical value, but also sustainable profit growth and improved cash flow, before assigning a higher multiple to this part of the story.

Industry growth is moderating, and the market is entering a new phase where differentiation and solution capability matter more.

MIR Databank's latest data show that China's industrial robot market grew 17% Y/Y in 2Q26, with 1H26 shipments at 188,612 units, but the full-year forecast suggests easing growth momentum into 2H26E. Both domestic and foreign players are intensifying competition, launching new products, and focusing on cost and solution selling. End-customers are increasingly demanding integrated solutions, fast delivery, and strong after-sales support. For Estun, this means that simply growing volume is no longer enough; the company will need to continue innovating and building on its strengths in quality and service to stand out in a more mature, price-competitive market. The company's accumulating installed base and after-sales platform remain positives, but the environment is more challenging.

Exports and new growth drivers remain longer-term opportunities, but near-term upside is limited as the market resets expectations.

While Estun has made progress in expanding its product portfolio and exploring overseas markets, exports have yet to become a major growth engine and face headwinds from global competition and localization by international peers. The company's investments in collaborative and humanoid robots, as well as its focus on high-value applications, are encouraging for the long term, but will take time to scale and deliver meaningful financial impact. With margin expansion already largely realized and industry growth momentum easing, we see limited near-term catalysts for further re-rating. Estun's disciplined execution and margin delivery deserve credit, but the stock's valuation is likely to reset as investors look for the next phase of sustainable growth.

The chart(s) show J.P. Morgan's continuing coverage of the stocks; the current analysts may or may not have covered it over the entire period. J.P. Morgan ratings or designations: OW = Overweight, N= Neutral, UW = Underweight, NR = Not Rated

Explanation of Equity Research Ratings, Designations and Analyst(s) Coverage Universe:

J.P. Morgan uses the following rating system: Overweight (over the duration of the price target indicated in this report, we expect this stock will outperform the average total return of the stocks in the Research Analyst's, or the Research Analyst's team's, coverage universe); Neutral (over the duration of the price target indicated in this report, we expect this stock will perform in line with the average total return of the stocks in the Research Analyst's, or the Research Analyst's team's, coverage universe); and Underweight (over the duration of the price target indicated in this report, we expect this stock will underperform the average total return of the stocks in the Research Analyst's, or the Research Analyst's team's, coverage universe. NR is Not Rated. In this case, J.P. Morgan has removed the rating and, if applicable, the price target, for this stock because of either a lack of a sufficient fundamental basis or for legal, regulatory or policy reasons. The previous rating and, if applicable, the price target, no longer should be relied upon. An NR designation is not a recommendation or a rating. Some stocks under coverage have a rating but no price target; in these cases, we expect the stock will outperform/perform in line/underperform the average total return of the stocks in the Research Analyst's, or the Research Analyst's team's, coverage universe of the relevant duration of the region. In our Asia (ex-Australia and ex-India) and U.K. small- and mid-cap Equity Research, each stock's expected total return is compared to the expected total return of a benchmark country market index, not to those Research Analysts' coverage universe. If it does not appear in the Important Disclosures section of this report, the certifying Research Analyst's coverage universe can be found on J.P. Morgan's Research website, <https://www.jpmorganmarkets.com>.
