

The Global Volatility Pulse

Earnings rekindle FOMO

An exceptional grab for upside drove record flattening in call skews. Comparing earnings momentum with recent performance in EU, we identify fundamental leaders/laggards + catch-up/de-rating opportunities. In US, hedge small caps as their leadership is increasingly at odds with fundamentals.

Beneath the rally: where performance and fundamentals diverge. As earnings season draws to a close, not all price action appears equally supported by fundamentals. Comparing earnings momentum with beta-adjusted performance, European Banks and Technology remain fundamental leaders, while our screen (see Figure 7) identifies a range of catch-up and de-rating opportunities beneath the surface. Among the top-ranked candidates, Telefonica, Prudential and Legrand stand out as catch-up candidates, favoring calls, call/call spreads and call spreads, respectively. Conversely, Legal & General, Iberdrola and Pernod Ricard emerge as potential de-rating candidates, favouring put spreads, put spreads and outright puts. At the index level, the DAX remains a notable European laggard. While this has largely reflected subdued earnings momentum, improving PMIs and growth surprises point to potential for a more supportive earnings backdrop ahead, reinforcing the case for DAX upside.

Small caps, big performance: time to hedge: We recently argued that small-cap outperformance looks increasingly disconnected from fundamentals. Yet the Russell 2000 is up 21% YTD, well ahead of the S&P 500 and Nasdaq (Not such a big deal). Indeed, our analysis shows that even accounting for the disproportionate AI exposure during the last quarter, small caps outperformance vs the S&P/Nasdaq still appears extreme. Moreover, the AI tailwind may fade following the June Russell rebalance, which reduced the weight of AI disruptors as several high-flying names graduated into larger-cap indices. With IWM volatility remaining among the cheapest across popular hedging options, we continue to favor IWM put spreads: buy IWM Oct26 295 puts (39-delta) and sell IWM Oct26 270 puts for 1.7% and a max expiry payout ratio of 4.9-to-1.

Charts of the Week:

- ◆ Skews collapse, but tails remain bid: favor down-and-out puts & appearing put spreads
- ◆ The earnings disconnect: strong Results, weak reactions
- ◆ Gold's upside chase awaits CPI validation
- ◆ NVDA earnings steal the show
- ◆ Equity euphoria falls below double digits despite sharp rally

Beneath the rally: where fundamentals and performance diverge

Broadening macro support is reinforcing the recovery: Risk assets have rebounded strongly as the bulk of earnings season has delivered a supportive backdrop for equities, the worst of the momentum sell-off appears to be behind us, and concerns around the Iran-driven stagflation shock have faded (Figure 1). Macro data has also turned more constructive, with growth surprises rebounding and inflation pressures easing from recent highs. PMIs point to activity holding up well through Q2 and gaining momentum into Q3, particularly in Germany and the periphery (Figure 2), as echoed by our economists in 'Euro Area Outlook, 7-Aug'. Together, resilient earnings, improving growth momentum and a more supportive positioning backdrop have underpinned the recent rally.

FIGURE 2. European PMIs point to improving activity momentum, led by Germany and the periphery

Beneath the rally, important divergences remain: Most major equity markets have rallied strongly over the past two weeks, led by the US. Yet, the DAX remains a notable European laggard despite recent gains, while the RTY stands out as the best-performing major US index YTD (Figure 3), reinforcing our DAX catch-up (see here) and RTY hedge (see here) themes. Options markets have mirrored this shift in sentiment, as investors have aggressively chased upside, driving a near-unprecedented flattening in call skew across both Europe and the US (Figure 4, also see our recent report ODTA call rush).

FIGURE 4. Recent rally triggered an exceptional grab for upside and an unprecedented call skew flattening

As the broad relief rally matures, the key question shifts from market direction to whether recent gains are fundamentally justified. By comparing earnings momentum with beta-adjusted returns, we highlight Europe's fundamental leaders, catch-up opportunities, potential de-rating candidates and structural laggards (Figure 5 and Figure 6).

Dispersion beneath the surface remains fertile hunting ground for selective opportunities.

European Banks (SX7E) and Tech (SX8P), including ASML, continue to stand out as fundamental leaders, combining strong earnings momentum with robust relative performance. In contrast, names such as Legrand, Prudential and Telefonica screen as attractive catch-up candidates, where improving fundamentals have yet to be reflected in their recent performance.

Potential trade expressions via options: We extend the earnings-versus-performance framework (Figure 6) by incorporating implied volatility, creating a quantitative screen for potential options opportunities. Names with supportive earnings momentum than their recent beta-adjusted performance would suggest (see Under-/Over-performance column in Figure 7) may present attractive catch-up opportunities and warrant consideration as call or call-spread candidates. Conversely, stocks that have materially outperformed their earnings backdrop may offer potential de-rating opportunities, which can be expressed through put or put-spreads.

How to read the screen? The Under-/Over-performance metric measures the gap between recent beta-adjusted returns and earnings momentum, while the volatility metrics help assess how efficiently that view can be expressed through options. For example, Telefonica screens as a catch-up candidate, having underperformed relative to its earnings momentum. Combined with a strong proprietary Volatility Score and relatively flat call skew, this suggests call spreads may offer an attractive way to express the view. By contrast, Legal & General screens as having significantly outperformed its earnings backdrop; coupled with elevated volatility and steep put skew, put spreads may provide a more efficient way to position for a potential reversal.

Small caps, big performance: time to hedge

We recently warned that the exceptionally strong run in small caps appears to be at odds with fundamentals, given weaker earnings revisions vs large caps and increasing macro headwinds building (e.g., rising rate sensitivity coupled with the risk of a more hawkish Fed outlook) (Not such a big deal). Indeed, since then small caps have extended their outperformance. For instance, YTD RTY (small caps) is up 21.0%. For comparison, both the S&P and Nasdaq are lagging at 13.1% and 17.9%.

Interestingly, some commentators have attributed part of the recent strength in small caps to the emergence of AI-related winners outside of traditional Big Tech, particularly in power infrastructure, electrical equipment, and data-center supply chains, something we have outlined before (see 2026 Kickoff: What We Heard from Clients). However, this is unlikely to be the full explanation. For instance, without the Russell constituents that overlap in the Barclays AI disruptors universe (see Positioning for AI Disruption) (e.g., Bloom Energy, Credo Tech, Digital Ocean), small caps still handily outperformed the S&P and Nasdaq by a hefty margin (Figure 8).

FIGURE 8. Russell YTD outperformance cannot be fully explained by its AI exposure

Source: Options Metrics, Barclays Derivatives Research

FIGURE 9. Post Jun26 rebalance, Russell2000 exposure to Barclays AI disruptors universe has fallen sharply

Past performance is not guarantee of future results
Source: Options Metrics, Barclays Derivatives Research

Interestingly, even this AI-related tailwind is likely to be less of a factor going forward. Indeed, as a result of the strong AI rally in April, some of the AI disruptors were promoted into larger-cap Russell indices because their market capitalizations had grown substantially (including Bloom Energy, Credo Tech, Digital Ocean). As a result, the cumulative weight of AI disruptors following the late Jun rebalance is now half a quarter less than at the start of the year (3.8% vs 4.9%), and half vs before the rebalance.

Going forward, small caps (IWM) top our cheap vol screen (indeed, its vol is the cheapest among popular hedging options, see ODTE call rush). As such, we reiterate buying IWM put spreads (see Not such a big deal). For instance, buy IWM Oct26 295 puts (39-delta) and sell IWM Oct26 270 puts for 1.7% and a max expiry payout ratio of 4.9-to-1.

The earnings disconnect: strong Results, weak reactions

With most of S&P 500 companies and index market cap having reported, 2Q26 results have been tracking well ahead of expectations, with the vast majority of companies beating consensus. However, the price reaction has been much less forgiving: despite strong fundamentals, both beats and misses have generated negative average reactions for the first time since 4Q24 (2Q26 Earnings Update: TMT Growth Meets Capex Scrutiny).

The options market helps explain the disconnect. Implied earnings moves were broadly elevated relative to realized moves across sectors (Figure 14), particularly in Utilities and Tech, suggesting that investors came into earnings with high expectations and limited tolerance for anything short of a clean beat-and-raise. This is consistent with stretched positioning and growing scrutiny around AI capex.

FIGURE 14. 2Q26 earnings-related realized moves fell short of options-implied expectations across sectors

Source: Options Metrics, Barclays Derivatives Research

FIGURE 15. Avg. earnings-related moves across Big Tech names in 2Q26 were more than 2.5x the prior 2y avg.

Source: Options Metrics, Barclays Derivatives Research

One exception was Mag7 ex-Nvidia (expected to report on 26-Aug) which on average realized a 11.2% move (Figure 15). Such a move is 2.7x as large as the previous 2y average, and twice as large as the ex ante average implied move of 5.7%. Indeed, Big Tech growth remains the key driver of strong earnings, helped by strong results from AMZN and GOOGL, while consensus FY26 EPS estimates have continued to move higher.

A similar pattern has played out in Europe. With c.88% of SXXP market cap now through Q2 results, earnings season has broadly supported the region's catch-up narrative, with blended EPS growth rising, beat rates above historical averages and guidance the strongest since 2022. Yet, as in the US, the market response has proved considerably more demanding. Median post-earnings reactions have skewed negative, while stock-level dispersion has risen to one of the highest levels seen in recent quarters (see Q2 Earnings - Higher and broader).

Option markets point to the same conclusion. Implied earnings moves at the start of the season were generally elevated relative to realised outcomes (Figure 16), suggesting investors entered reporting season with high expectations and limited tolerance for disappointment. At the sector level, Technology delivered the largest realised earnings moves but still fell short of rich implies, while Consumer Discretionary also screened expensive (Figure 17). By contrast, Telecoms and Industrials delivered realised moves in excess of implied expectations, making them among the cheaper sectors from an event-pricing perspective.

Gold's upside chase awaits CPI validation

FIGURE 18. Options markets point to renewed gold FOMO, but CPI and Jackson Hole will determine staying power

Source: Bloomberg, Barclays Derivatives Research

Last week gold rallied 7.2%, its best weekly gain in eight months. Interestingly, options show there was strong upside chasing as the call to put volume ratio surged along with a strong bid for upside vs downside volatility. The rally was aided by a weak payroll, but its sustainability will crucially depend on incoming CPI data on Wed, 12-Aug, as well as the Jackson Hole symposium at the end of this month.

NVDA earnings steal the show

Through the lens of S&P options, CPI stands out as the largest macro catalyst this week. However, the risk premia currently embedded in CPI remain well below those associated with NVDA earnings on 26-Aug (aft-mkt), underscoring investors' continued focus on the AI narrative (Figure 19, see Tech Support for Tails). Indeed, as we see it, NVDA earnings command a bigger risk than Jackson Hole¹. Specifically, the CPI-related implied move fell over the past week to 55bps, broadly in line with the average realized move over the past year (Figure 20). For comparison, the S&P implied move around NVDA earnings has remained firm (Figure 19). Importantly, Barclays economists expect the July CPI report to show a rebound in inflation following June's unusually subdued print (see July CPI to rebound from June's lull, core CPI estimated to rise 0.24% m/m, a 26bp acceleration from June's -0.02% reading).

FIGURE 21. Retail activity has cooled despite the rally, suggesting speculative retail investors were not the primary driver of recent gains

Source: Options Metrics, Barclays Derivatives Research

The 1m MA of the EEI currently stands at 9.6%. While still well above its long-term average of 7.2% (1.4 standard deviations higher), it has fallen below double digits for the first time in two months despite the recent market rally. This suggests that speculative retail activity may not have been the primary driver of the move, consistent with seasonal patterns that typically see retail participation moderate during the summer months.

Our coverage analysts use a relative rating system in which they rate stocks as Overweight, Equal Weight or Underweight (see definitions below) relative to other companies covered by the analyst or a team of analysts that are deemed to be in the same industry (the "industry coverage universe").

In addition to the stock rating, we provide industry views which rate the outlook for the industry coverage universe as Positive, Neutral or Negative (see definitions below). A rating system using terms such as buy, hold and sell is not the equivalent of our rating system. Investors should carefully read the entire research report including the definitions of all ratings and not infer its contents from ratings alone.

Sustainable Investing Related Research: There is currently no globally accepted framework or definition (legal, regulatory or otherwise) of, nor market consensus as to what constitutes a 'sustainable', 'ESG', 'green', 'climate-friendly' or an equivalent company, investment, strategy or consideration or what precise attributes are required to be eligible to be categorised by such terms. This means there are different ways to evaluate a company or an investment and so different values may be placed on certain sustainability credentials as well as adverse ESG-related impacts of companies and ESG controversies. The evolving nature of sustainable investing considerations, models and methodologies means it can be challenging to definitively and universally classify a company or investment under a sustainable investing label and there may be areas where such companies and investments could improve or where adverse ESG-related impacts or ESG controversies exist. The evolving nature of sustainable finance related regulations and the development of jurisdiction-specific regulatory criteria also means that there is likely to be a degree of divergence as to the interpretation of such terms in the market. We expect industry guidance, market practice, and regulations in this field to continue to evolve.
