2Q26 Review: Third Quarter of User Growth Strengthens the Durability Argument

Dropbox delivered a beat-and-raise across revenue, operating margin and uFCF, and disclosed that paying users grew by 96,000 sequentially, the third straight quarter of user growth and the largest add in ~3 years. Revenue guidance for the full year was raised $13.5 mn, above the $6.0 mn 2Q beat, although gross margin guidance was cut to ~81.5% from an 81.5%-82.0% range due to higher expected compute costs as AI features are incorporated into the platform. This was the first print with Ashraf Alkarmi as co-CEO ahead of Drew Houston's move to Executive Chairman, and management laid out three phases it is focusing on: return core FSS to growth, prove it is durable, then layer on faster growth via platform and AI. Regarding Dash, which was previously a standalone, it is now being folded into Dropbox as native in-context intelligence across the base, in our view a concession that Dash was less likely to win as a destination product, but a better use of the asset, as the advantage was less the AI layer and more the content, permissions, versioning and governance underneath it. An interesting, albeit speculative, frame discussed on the call is the concept of Dropbox as a content layer beneath other applications. Management described a dynamic where AI-native companies need storage and the surrounding content infrastructure and would rather not (or are unable to) rebuild it themselves, representing an opportunity where Dropbox could play an increasingly important role. While early, it represents a new potential growth vector for the next phase of Dropbox. We maintain our Neutral rating, and are establishing our Dec-27 PT of $35 (vs. our Dec-26 PT of $25).

- 2Q26 (Jun-end) Results: Revenue and operating margin beat, with strong net new paying users. Dropbox reported revenue of $631.5 mn (vs. JPMe of $625.7 mn and consensus of $626.7 mn), up +0.9% y/y, or +1.7% y/y and +0.1% on a CC basis excluding FormSwift. PF gross margin tracked to 81.6% (vs. JPMe of 81.0% and consensus of 81.7%). Operating expenses grew +3.6% y/y to $264.3 mn, driving PF operating income of $250.8 mn (vs. JPMe of $241.5 mn), a 39.7% margin, 90 bps above consensus and 120 bps above the guide. PF EPS of $0.75 came in above consensus of $0.74. uFCF tracked to $283.5 mn (vs. consensus of $267.3 mn), implying a ~45% margin, or $1.25 per share, up +25% y/y. On metrics, paying users of 18.19 mn added 96,000 sequentially, the largest add in ~3 years. Total ARR of $2.566 bn grew +1.0% y/y, or +0.2% ex-FormSwift on a CC basis, while ARPU was $139.68, down $1.50 sequentially.
- 3Q26 (Sep-end) Guide: Revenue a touch above Street and operating margin guide 180 bps below. Revenue is guided to $627-$630 mn (midpoint of $628.5 mn vs. JPMe of $623.6 mn and consensus of $627.4 mn), implying -0.9% y/y as reported but roughly flat ex-FormSwift, with CC revenue of $621-$624 mn. PF operating margin is guided to ~38.5% compared to JPMe of 40.0% and consensus of 40.3%. Management noted timing-related savings on brand spend and outside services shifted out of Q2 into 2H, which we would attribute part of the step-down to.
- FY26 (Dec-end) Guide: Raised across revenue, margin and uFCF. Revenue is guided to $2,513-$2,523 mn (midpoint of $2,518 mn vs. prior

Summary Investment Thesis and Valuation

Investment Thesis

Dropbox is a leading cloud-based content & collaboration platform, enabling individuals and teams to store and team up on content. Dropbox boasts enormous scale: it has 700M+ registered users, 1T+ pieces of content, and is one of the fastest SaaS companies to have reached >$1B in revenue. The company also blurs the line between Enterprise Software and Consumer Internet approaches as it has penetrated F500 customers through a viral self-service model. This has freed Dropbox to focus more heavily on R&D to drive adoption in a highly competitive market vs. mega-vendors Microsoft and Google and pure-plays such as Box; and we evaluate Dropbox to be well positioned given its scale, natural incumbency network effect, platform neutrality, and UX focus. However, we see near-term headwinds to growth in the company's FSS business, with a slowing pace of paid user additions raising concerns of product saturation, coupled with new product initiatives remaining in early days. We rate Dropbox Neutral.

Valuation

We are establishing a Dec-27 PT of $35. Our multiple is based on ~9x EV/CY28E uFCF (using CY28E uFCF of $1,114 mn).

guidance of $2,497-$2,512 mn and consensus of $2,511 mn), a $13.5 mn midpoint raise, with CC revenue of $2,482-$2,492 mn. At the midpoint, FY26 revenue guidance implies roughly flat growth y/y, or +0.8% excluding FormSwift. PF gross margin was trimmed to ~81.5% from an 81.5%-82.0% range due to compute costs associated with rolling out AI capabilities on the platform. PF operating margin is guided to 40.0%-40.5% (vs. 39.5%-40.0% prior and consensus of 39.7%), implying a large step up in Q4 margins, driven by R&D efficiencies from consolidating Dash into the core and a go-to-market rebalancing now underway. uFCF is guided to at or above $1,070 mn (vs. $1,055 mn prior), implying a ~42% margin.

Investment Thesis

Leading Cloud-Based Content and Collaboration Platform

Dropbox is a leading cloud-based content and collaboration platform, enabling individuals and teams to store and team up on content, using any device from any location. Dropbox boasts enormous scale: it has 700M+ registered users, 1T+ pieces of content, and is one of the fastest SaaS companies to have reached >$1B in revenue. The company also blurs the line between Enterprise Software and Consumer Internet approaches, as it has penetrated F500 customers and has grown to >18M paying users through a viral self-service model. We believe from our customer due diligence that Dropbox wins based on the neutrality of its platform, product differentiators such as Paper, Showcase, and Smart Sync, and is one of the few companies that has created strong customer affinity and loyalty through its superior user experience, in our view.

Efficient Self-Service Financial Model

Dropbox's highly efficient self-service model is evident in that >90% of its revenue comes from self-service channels, or customers who purchase a subscription through its mobile app or website. The company has not required an outbound sales force, resulting in low S&M spend as a percentage of revenue (20% in 2020) compared to its peers, whose S&M spend can reach 50%+ of revenue. Other best-in-class self-service models resulting in low S&M spend include Twilio (22%) and Atlassian (16%). Revenue through partnerships is also minimal. Dropbox regularly targets its registered user base to become paying users through free trials, email campaigns, in-product notification, and other marketing efforts, though it focuses on a positive user experience vs. aggressive bombardment. We believe the low-hanging fruit of self-service remains large, precluding the need for a disruptively broad S&M investment.

Viral Adoption

The relatively low S&M spend has afforded Dropbox the opportunity to focus on its product and user experience, which we believe has led to viral adoption of Dropbox with both consumers and businesses. Its viral adoption blends a consumer internet model with enterprise penetration without the cost of enterprise sales reps. A few customers we spoke with during our diligence process revealed that Dropbox was adopted by its employees without any formal or prior permission from IT or management.

Platform Neutrality

Platform neutrality has been cited by customers as a key reason for selecting Dropbox, whereas Microsoft and Google are perceived to play to their own ecosystem of applications through integration and bundling. Where possible, Dropbox has developed its product to work with and provide access to its users' content regardless of where it resides. In addition, Dropbox has built connectivity to major collaboration vendors such as Slack, and various large companies continue to partner with Dropbox.

Salesforce.com $100M Private Placement

We believe the IPO's $100M private placement with Salesforce paired with a partnership announcement is compelling as it could signal a stamp of approval on Dropbox and potentially eases the path to a co-selling agreement. While Dropbox has integration partnerships with Google and Microsoft, we believe the relationship with Salesforce is unique in that Dropbox is not in meaningful “coopetition” with Salesforce like it is with Microsoft and Google. As there is no competitive conflict, we think likelihood of success for cross-selling between the two platforms could be a positive.

100% Recurring Revenue

Dropbox’s revenue is nearly 100% recurring, which offers it the ability to reach non-GAAP gross margins (slightly offset by cost of supporting free users) higher than SaaS companies with a meaningfully sized professional services component. 100% recurring revenue mix also improves the predictability of the model.

Valuation

$35 Dec 2027 PT Based on Relative Valuation

We are establishing a Dec-27 PT of $35. Our multiple is based on ~9x EV/CY28E uFCF (using CY28E uFCF of $1,114 mn). The multiple is at a discount to its scaled software financial comp set, which trade at an average ~10x multiple. We are applying a discount to Dropbox due to its lower FTM revenue growth profile (-0.7% for DBX vs. 5% for comps) and some exposure to the lower-end of the market, though partially offset by a superior FTM FCF margin (37% for DBX vs. 30% for comps) and ongoing initiatives to accelerate growth by stabilizing its core business and through emerging products like Dash.

Risks to Rating and Price Target

Downside Risks

Competition from deep pocketed mega-vendors and a long tail of other competitors may inhibit growth. Dropbox has established itself as a category leader over the past decade; however, persistent competitive pressures from a long tail of competitors could inhibit the company from maintaining top-line growth, expanding margins, and retaining customers. Additionally, Dropbox may find difficulty competing with mega-vendors such as Microsoft and Google, which can afford to heavily discount or give away file sync and share functionality as an add-on to a broader productivity suite.

Commoditization of underlying technology and functionality. Dropbox is a multi-layered platform; however, its underlying storage functionality faces commoditization and therefore higher degrees of pricing power and profitability may be difficult to achieve. Advances in software and hardware manufacturing (memory, storage, processors) have translated into cheaper data center costs, and price wars among web-scale cloud vendors such as Amazon Web Services, Microsoft Azure, and Google Cloud have further driven down costs.

Security concerns may limit adoption of SaaS, especially within enterprise. Though Software-as-a-Service (SaaS) has become an established software delivery model, larger enterprises have cited security concerns as reasons for not adopting SaaS/cloud solutions. Many verticals, especially financial services, have been reluctant to store data outside the organization. Recent events have also increased privacy concerns, especially for international customers, and in Europe where heavy regulation exists (e.g., GDPR).

Upside Risks

Paying user growth could improve. Much of Dropbox’s growth story hinges on monetizing what it deems as high value targets—or the population of free registered accounts that have a propensity to convert to paying given characteristics such as premium device usage, corporate email domain, etc. An improvement in the company’s paid user additions, which have started to show a deceleration in growth, could help mitigate concerns of saturation in its end-markets and improve growth prospects for the business.

New product initiatives could improve retention/drive upsell. Dropbox is heavily focused on investing in improving the experience of its platform, as well as adding new product capabilities, such as Dropbox Dash. Optimizing its core FSS business could help reduce current churn levels and present an opportunity to upsell existing products that have lacked discoverability prior. In addition, earlier than expected traction of its newer portfolio, focused on AI tools, could support a stronger topline framework.

Macroeconomic gyrations. Several areas of Dropbox's business, including its document workflow products and Teams offerings, have been subject to heightened pressures due to a weaker software spending environment over the past year. An improvement in the broader macroeconomic environment could help reduce price sensitivity and encourage greater potential for cross-sell of these products over time, supporting healthier long-term growth and greater pricing leverage.

Initiated coverage Apr 17, 2018. All share prices are as of market close on the previous business day.

The chart(s) show J.P. Morgan's continuing coverage of the stocks; the current analysts may or may not have covered it over the entire period. J.P. Morgan ratings or designations: OW = Overweight, N= Neutral, UW = Underweight, NR = Not Rated

Explanation of Equity Research Ratings, Designations and Analyst(s) Coverage Universe:

J.P. Morgan uses the following rating system: Overweight (over the duration of the price target indicated in this report, we expect this stock will outperform the average total return of the stocks in the Research Analyst's, or the Research Analyst's team's, coverage universe); Neutral (over the duration of the price target indicated in this report, we expect this stock will perform in line with the average total return of the stocks in the Research Analyst's, or the Research Analyst's team's, coverage universe); and Underweight (over the duration of the price target indicated in this report, we expect this stock will underperform the average total return of the stocks in the Research Analyst's, or the Research Analyst's team's, coverage universe). NR is Not Rated. In this case, J.P. Morgan has removed the rating and, if applicable, the price target, for this stock because of either a lack of a sufficient fundamental basis or for legal, regulatory or policy reasons. The previous rating and, if applicable, the price target, no longer should be relied upon. An NR designation is not a recommendation or a rating. Some stocks under coverage have a rating but no price target; in these cases, we expect the stock will outperform/perform in line/underperform the average total return of the stocks in the Research Analyst's, or the Research Analyst's team's, coverage universe of the relevant duration of the region. In our Asia (ex-Australia and ex-India) and U.K. small- and mid-cap Equity Research, each stock's expected total return is compared to the expected total return of a benchmark country market index, not to those Research Analysts' coverage universe. If it does not appear in the Important Disclosures section of this report, the certifying Research Analyst's coverage universe can be found on J.P. Morgan's Research website, <https://www.jpmorganmarkets.com>.
