Legrand: Getting the 800-volt gorilla off its back

Legrand enters its CMD facing a difficult balancing act. Anything less than a +2pp upgrade in LFL growth targets to +5% to +7% through 2030 would imply data center growth slips to HSD, amplifying 800 VDC share-loss concerns and looking increasingly out of step with the market and Data Centre World Asia setting. This runs up against Legrand's typical conservatism, and the higher 2026 base, though we expect Legrand to recall, and avoid, similar missteps from its HSD data center guidance at CMD'24. Management can instead showcase portfolio breadth and 800 VDC readiness, renewing confidence in outer-year growth. Legrand hosts its CMD on Tuesday, September 29 at Marina Bay Sands in Singapore, with plenary sessions webcast from 11.45am SGT (4.45am UKT).

Legrand's reshaped portfolio enables a 5-7% organic growth target. Legrand can reach the bottom of this range with any more than HSD data center growth (Exhibit 4), which is not a sensible base case (even from 2026, LDD is more reasonable). 15% data center growth and unchanged rest-of-portfolio targets underpin a 7.5% group LFL CAGR to FY30 (+120bps vs cons). The implied c.12% total sales CAGR (4% M&A) is +150bps above the prior 10% guide, reaching 2030 sales of c.€17bn (+15% vs old, Exhibit 3).

Legrand's 800 VDC risk is overstated, and offsets underappreciated. Legrand's FY25 portfolio implies 20% of sales at-risk (c.17% rack PDUs and c.3% UPS, Exhibit 13), though FY26 M&A may already shrink this share. Absent yet is Legrand's sidecar or DC PDUs and Busbar (Exhibit 18), and we hope here Legrand becomes more vocal. The CMD can rebut share-loss fears without confining 800 VDC to a 'niche' market.

Portfolio breadth parries 800 VDC concerns and comes to the fore; M&A is the engine. Legrand's grey space exposure has increased from 5-7% in 2020-23 to 25% in 2025, and could reach c.30% in 2026, with grey space c.75% of 2026 data center scope (Exhibit 8). Nascent geographic diversification is also progressing; we expect data centers are >20% of FY26 Rest of World (RoW) sales (Exhibit 9).

Investment Implications

We rate Legrand Outperform with a target price of €170.

GUIDANCE IN FOCUS

Organic growth guidance of any lower than 5-7% unlikely. Legrand can comfortably cover a 5-7% organic CAGR through 2030 (Exhibit 4), assuming 10-15% (LDD) LFL growth for data centers, unchanged targets for Energy Transition (MSD), Digital Lifestyle (L/MSD) and Essential Infrastructure (LSD), and M&A across all areas excl. Essential Infra (Exhibit 3). Legrand have already 'soft upgraded' their 2030 targets as of H1'25, targeting the upper end of the sales range (€12-15bn), with 10% total sales growth (LFL + M&A). We expect a formalisation of these targets, as opposed to any upgrades, though arguably with a little more support from the rest of the portfolio and robust data center demand we expect 6-8% LFL growth to be in reach.

Legrand, though conservative as they are, should avoid HSD data center targets, particularly given their 800 VDC share loss concerns. We do not expect a rehash of the aftermath of Legrand's Sep'24 CMD, where they had targeted HSD data center growth and were incessantly questioned on whether these targets were purely conservative or if there were some incipient cracks in their portfolio. This line of questioning would only be intensified again given the 800 VDC share-loss concerns (and would look out of place given the setting at Data Centre World Asia where Legrand has one of the largest booths). Legrand may lean on the fact that 2026 is their base after several years of strong growth already, though data center pipeline activity screens healthy through 2030, and we think LDD growth is still a comfortable guide particularly given Vertiv's targets (Exhibit 7) and standing consensus hyperscaler and neocloud capex expectations (Exhibit 5, likely too low, see Exhibit 6).

The rest of the portfolio growth targets to remain static. We don't expect any refresh to targets for the rest of Legrand's portfolio, though given recent underperformance of the segments to their long term targets, and where we are in the construction cycle, we see some fringe upside risk.

Data center CAGR at 15% LFL and c.50% of Legrand's M&A targeted towards the segment implies data centers drive close to 70% in Legrand's total sales growth to >€17bn (Exhibit 2), and delivers 7.5% LFL growth over 2026-2030, +120bps ahead of consensus.

EXHIBIT 2: Data centers contribute the vast majority of Legrand sales growth (LFL + M&A) through to 2030, and grow from just over 30% of sales in FY26 to close to half the group by 2030.

Source: Bernstein analysis and estimates, Company reports

EXHIBIT 3: Legrand could promise a 12% total sales CAGR (LFL + M&A) as a mid-teens data center CAGR underpins 7.5% LFL growth through 2027 to 2030.

EXHIBIT 4: We think Legrand could comfortably guide to 5-7% LFL growth through to 2030, as anything above HSD data center growth secures the bottom end of the range. We expect 15% data center growth in reach, and 7.5% Group LFL CAGR.

Rest of portfolio CAGR of 3.2% implies 2% Essential Infrastructure, 3.5% Digital Lifestyle, and 5% Energy Transition CAGR. We assume Legrand allocate their M&A proportionally to each segment, excluding Essential Infrastructure.

DEEP-DIVING LEGRAND'S DATA CENTER PORTFOLIO

Legrand have very deliberately reshaped their data center product and geographic portfolio through M&A. Over 2020-2023, the grey space was a fraction of Legrand's data center portfolio (5-7%), and this has since grown to 25% of 2025 sales, and we estimate c.30% of 2026 sales. M&A has been the driving force of this change, and we apportion c.75% of Legrand's 2026 scope impact pertaining to data centers serves the grey space, despite being just 25% of 2025 sales, with key acquisitions including Avtron, Kratos, TES, SRS, and Girtz.

Though Legrand's data center sales remain fairly concentrated geographically, we expect data centers could now represent >20% of RoW sales in FY26 (Exhibit 9). Legrand's data center portfolio is still fairly consolidated in NCA, and more so than European peers (Exhibit 10), though again through M&A Legrand have been making a concerted effort to broaden their data center exposure outside NCA (Exhibit 11). With (the narrative around) data center growth broadening out, and the US moratorium momentum building this may become increasingly in focus, though in the near term we see no signs of US data centers underperforming global growth.

Using Legrand's updated disclosures, we map the breadth of their product portfolio in data centers (Exhibit 12 - Exhibit 13), illustrating no single product defines their segment. Additionally, given the extent of FY26 M&A aimed at the grey space, it's likely Legrand could narrow the 20% of their portfolio disclosed to be at-risk-to-neutral to 800 VDC, though we think Legrand's focus should shift from mapping disruption to their available offsets (DC PDUs, DC Busbar).

Legrand's portfolio is healthy, and though their 800 VDC portfolio changes are most visible and sooner, we think they have enough firepower to demonstrate their plan and progress to broadening their remit and resolving any single-product risk, and refocus the narrative to more positive opportunities from 800 VDC.

EXHIBIT 8: Legrand have very deliberately grown their grey space exposure, and though they've mothballed this nomenclature, given c.75% of acquired 2026 scope is geared towards grey space, we think it could be as high as 30% by YE26.

Benoit had commented in the 2024 CMD that the then 5% grey space exposure was 'definitely' too small, and could go upwards of 20% through acquisitions.

800 VDC, AND THE NATURAL ABB COMPARISON

ABB and Legrand's valuations: an (oversimplified) tale of the fortunes of an 800 VDC winner and loser. It's likely the diverging multiple (Exhibit 14) reflects more than just expected share gains or losses from 800 VDC, given ABB have delivered strong and broad-based demand growth despite smaller group-level data center exposure, while Legrand have seen the rest of their portfolio perform much weaker. We expect reversing some of this discount to be up for grabs in the instance Legrand can outline their 800 VDC opportunity, and dispel any of the extreme share loss concerns which may be weighing the multiple.

The sector PEG more broadly has de-rated since NVIDIA's 800 VDC announcements last October (Exhibit 17), though uniquely in Legrand's case, their de-rating has been led by both multiple contraction and earnings upgrades. Across select electrical equipment names, average 2-year EPS CAGR has risen by c.4pp, while the sector has de-rated by close to 1 turn (Exhibit 15). Zooming in on European electricals (Exhibit 16), the PEG ratio has contracted across most names. In the case for ABB and Schneider, this may more likely be the case of the sell-side catching up to buy-side earnings expectations. In Legrand's case, the multiple has contracted despite consensus earnings upgrades, indicating some more meaningful growth concerns in the outer years, particularly 800 VDC.

Legrand and ABB are both 'reaching' to cover 800 VDC distribution; Legrand reaching up from the white space, and ABB down from the medium-voltage powertrain (Exhibit 19). Each of them can cover a broad array of new equipment, though at the surface level Legrand's 800 VDC coverage could even be better than ABB. In any case, Legrand's 800 VDC opportunity is real, and we expect them to spend more time illustrating the breadth of their new offering at the CMD.

EXHIBIT 14: Since 12-Oct-25 (a day prior to Nvidia's 800 VDC announcement), Legrand's (800v loser?) multiple has derated by 15%, while ABB's (800v winner?) has derated by 11%.

This discount likely also reflects Legrand's increasing concentration around data center growth, whilst ABB seems to be firing on all cylinders.

EXHIBIT 15: Global Capital Goods' average 2-year forward EPS CAGR expectations have risen c.4pp, while the average multiple has fallen by c.1 turn.

EXHIBIT 16: Legrand is unique in EU Cap Goods as it's PEG has de-rated by -29% since the eve of Nvidia's 800 VDC announcement in Oct'25, and this has been driven by multiple contraction in spite of earnings upgrades.

EU Capital Goods otherwise have almost all de-rated on a PEG ratio basis, though driven by earnings upgrades whilst the multiple has been unchanged.

EXHIBIT 17: Though not NVIDIA's first instance mentioning 800 VDC, this article accompanied their whitepaper and the OCP Global Summit (13-16 Oct'25), and marks the opening of the 800 VDC theme.

We would note it was largely after this article that the electrical OEMs released a flurry of press releases with their own 800 VDC offerings.

EXHIBIT 19: NVIDIA's simplified roadmap suggests Legrand faces 800 VDC disruption and opportunity sooner, and perhaps that Legrand and ABB's addressable markets in the 'DC-native' data center are not too dissimilar.

We understand Legrand could do an SST if the market was sufficiently attractive, assembling others' equipment into a system, and ABB appear to have DC busbar / busway capability though don't highlight this in their product portfolio. Though ABB do not plan to offer a sidecar, they can accommodate more decentralised conversion from LVAC to LVDC through their DC UPS.

VALUATION METHODOLOGYLegrand SA

Our TP of €170 for Legrand is based on combining a DCF-based valuation of with a separate valuation to account for Legrand's bolt-on M&A strategy. For the DCF valuation we use a WACC of 7.6% and a terminal growth rate of 2%. We calculate the value of the M&A strategy by estimating the cash available for acquisitions from FCF. We then assume acquisition multiples (2.0x EV/Sales, based on the past track record) and synergies (4% of target sales) and apply a discount (c.13x) to the Legrand multiple to the incremental EBIT and discount that back to perpetuity.

RISKSLegrand SA

Downside risks: 1) Our TP includes €9 per share of value creation from Legrand's M&A strategy. This is based on assuming Legrand will be able to drive additional sales of ~2% annually from M&A. If the actual throughput of finalised M&A transactions is much lower than this estimate (due to the reluctance of sellers or more competition from other buyers), then it will be tough to justify this additional source of valuation upside. 2) Despite Legrand's track record for offsetting inflation with good pricing management, current commodity inflation remains volatile. Our forecasts from 2026 onward assume a 2% positive increase from pricing (historical average of ~2%); however, if commodity prices decline in any given year then the positive pricing contribution could be lower than we estimate. 3) Delays to Legrand's 800 VDC roadmap create a transition gap, with legacy AC products disrupted before replacement DC products are market-ready.
