Plenty Of Room For The Fal.Con To Soar

CRWD is using their data and platform advantage to come out with a growing AI Security portfolio, one which responds to customer needs as they implement / defend against AI. Opportunity opens up additional TAM, which allows the company to bring forward $10/$20bn ARR targets by a year.

Key Takeaways

- Mult new AI products introduced at Fal.Con, most incremental was Guardian, which expands AIDR into full-lifecycle AI agent security/supporting higher pricing.
- Introduced SafeMind, which adds cybersecurity-specific AI models, with 29-37% better detection and up to 99% lower cost vs selected frontier models.
- As security becomes a bottleneck to AI adoption, AI security spend set to increase, adding ~$215bn to CRWD expanded TAM ($565bn by CY34).
- Expanded TAM and early traction allow company to pullforward FY31/36 targets by a year and introduce FY28 NNARR growth target of >20%.
- Walked away encouraged as broader TAM, but more encouragingly, clear articulation of right to win the opportunity. Remain OW.

We attended CrowdStrike’s Fal.Con User Conference and Investor Briefing in Las Vegas, NV on Wednesday, September 1st and 2nd.

Helping resolve a key AI adoption bottleneck, and tilting scales back towards the defenders. As we have heard since model introductions earlier this year, and amplified as models continue to advance, the cyber threat environment has never been so severe (e.g. vulnerabilities growing exponentially, time to exploit shrinking). As a result, enterprises are looking for solutions that will allow them to feel more in control of AI as they install it in their environments and defend against it. Highlighted by the appearance of Jensen Huang and other AI luminaries at Fal.Con, the AI ecosystem sees CrowdStrike as being able to provide some of that control. We walked away from the conference impressed by the extensiveness of the portfolio rolled out, the greater effectiveness of their solutions (both in efficacy and cost), the extent to which the solutions can give assymetric intelligence back to defenders, and their ability to get the AI ecosystem behind them. We remain firmly OW as we see CRWD’s targets achievable with only low-to-mid single digits percentage of the TAM, a number we would expect to grow.

Market Opportunity Continues to Expand, Leaving Plenty of Room to Run.

CrowdStrike now sees a ~$565B addressable market by CY34, with AI security accounting for ~$215B (~38%) of the opportunity. We are encouraged by this new TAM breakout as the company appears well positioned to capture this spend through an expanding product portfolio (Falcon Guardian, SafeMind, Agentic SOC and Agentic Identity Provider), underpinned by its installed sensor base and proprietary security data. Management's assumption of only ~3.5% share to reach $20B of ARR looks conservative as it effectively assumes no further share gains, despite our reseller checks continuing to point to incumbent displacement. This runway gave management confidence to pull forward its $10B and $20B ending ARR targets by one year to within FY30 and FY35, respectively, with nearer-term strength reflected in initial FY28 guidance for 20%+ NNARR growth.

Guardian Is the Near-Term Product Catalyst, While SafeMind Could Be the Larger Opportunity.

Guardian was the most impactful near-term product announcement, expanding AIDR from AI discovery and prompt protection into full-lifecycle visibility, control and enforcement at runtime across endpoint, cloud and SaaS. While Guardian has only just launched, it builds on clear momentum in the previous AIDR offering, which saw ARR nearly tripling Q/Q in F2Q27. Given the substantially broader functionality and management's expectation for higher pricing, we see scope for continued momentum as customers increasingly standardize AI security on Falcon. Longer term, SafeMind (CrowdStrike's first cybersecurity-specific model and harness family) could prove even more consequential by pairing cyber expertise with proprietary Falcon telemetry generated from ~7T security events per day. SafeMind combines Red Tempest, an offensive model continuously searching for vulnerabilities and attack paths, with Blue Solano, a defensive model focused on detecting threats, stopping breaches and using existing security tooling to respond, creating a continuous learning loop between attack and defense. Management noted SafeMind's cybersecurity-specific harness can reduce false-positive rates from ~80% at the general model layer to ~20%, while Blue Solano delivered 29%-37% better detection rates than selected frontier models at up to 99% lower cost per task in management testing. These performance and cost advantages highlight how CrowdStrike's proprietary data can become a flywheel for newer products and potentially accelerate AI adoption across security operations. In addition, CrowdStrike broadened its AI portfolio with Agentic SOC, which builds on Next-Gen SIEM, Onum and AgentWorks; Agentic Identity Provider, which extends identity controls to AI agents; and AI Gateway, which provides centralized control over enterprise AI traffic. Together, these offerings materially expand Falcon's coverage across agentic security, SOC and identity, strengthening CrowdStrike's ability to capture share within the ~$215B AI-security TAM.

Opportunity Beginning to Show Up in the Model. As of F2Q27, management's FY27 outlook calls for ~34% NNARR growth, with the new FY28 framework calling for another 20%+ despite a tougher comparison. This implies ~24.6% FY28 ending ARR growth to ~$8.23B, or ~1-2% above pre-event Street estimates. The FY28 floor also creates meaningful cushion in the newly pulled-forward $10B ARR target within FY30: from the implied FY28 ARR base, only ~9% FY29 NNARR growth would be required to reach $10B by FY29, leaving room for the target to prove conservative if current momentum persists. Importantly, management highlighted adding >$200M to FY27 NNARR since first introducing a 20% growth target at last year's Fal.Con, ultimately taking the outlook to ~34% as execution and demand strengthened. While we wouldn't assume a similar cadence, this track record points to meaningful upside to the initial FY28 framework if momentum and execution remain strong.

Management also guided to 32.5%+ FY28 FCF margin versus 30%+ in FY27 despite higher CapEx and continued investment behind newer AI products. While the FCF target is largely embedded in expectations, CrowdStrike's ability to meaningfully outperform its initial growth framework gives us greater confidence in the durability of growth as the opportunity set continues to expand.

Convicted in our $238 PT. Confidence in 20%+ FY28 NNARR growth, alongside the one-year pullforward of its $10B and $20B ARR targets, reinforces our conviction in our $238 PT. We view this confidence as supported by momentum across newer products, continued expansion within the installed base and a still-large new-logo opportunity, all of which strengthen visibility into durable long-term growth. Our $238 PT remains based on a 60x EV/CY30 FCF multiple applied to our $5.44B CY30 FCF estimate and discounted back at a 12% WACC, implying ~34x EV/CY27 Sales, or ~14x growth-adjusted.

OVERWEIGHT THESIS

CrowdStrike has quickly risen to market leadership as a next-gen SaaS security platform. Continued share gain in the core endpoint market, in addition to growing uptake of emerging modules (SIEM, identity protection, cloud security) and favorable AI positioning should help to sustain 20%+ topline longer term.

With the broader platform garnering traction, GenAI gaining momentum, and improvements in EBIT, we see durable 25%+ FCF CAGR over the next 3 years. We believe the stock's premium valuation is justified given potential topline re-acceleration, improving margin profile, and highly defensible moat across multiple areas of the security stack, driving our OW thesis.
