- KOSPI plunged more than 14% amid hotter-than-expected inflation, concerns around AI-related credit and Chinese DRAM maker. The Pharmaceutical, F&B and Leisure sectors outperformed this week, while the Tech, Machinery and Shipbuilding sectors underperformed the most (Exhibit 17).
- Foreign investors continued to sell the KOSPI market, driven by outflows for KOSPI Tech (Exhibit 44).
- KOSPI 12m-forward EPS was revised up by 0.3%. The Construction sector saw the strongest upward earnings revisions, while the Machinery sector was revised down the most this week (Exhibit 31).
- The KRW strengthened 0.9% vs. USD this week. Also, it strengthened 0.4% vs. JPY and 0.2% vs. EUR.
- The latest Korea Equity Risk Barometer (GSSRKERB Index) is at -1.4, staying in a risk-adverse territory.

Charts of the Week: KOSPI Sell-Off Pulse Check

- This week, a series of negative headlines across macro, credit, and memory industry weighed heavily on global chip stocks and Korean equities. As a result, global semiconductor stocks have recorded their longest losing streak on record, declining for eight consecutive sessions. The KOSPI has also fallen by more than 20% over the past eight trading days, a magnitude of decline previously seen only during the Asian Financial Crisis, the Global Financial Crisis and the COVID-19 outbreak. The broader sell-off in the semiconductor sector has been closely mirrored by the Korean market. The Philadelphia Semiconductor Index has declined sharply this week, with the KOSPI exhibiting an even greater downside beta given its concentrated exposure to memory stocks. Despite continued earnings upgrades, the sharp correction has pushed the PHLX Semiconductor Index's 12-month forward P/E below the trough reached during the Liberation Day sell-off. KOSPI valuation has also compressed to 4.2x forward P/E, equivalent to approximately -3.2 standard deviations from its historical average.
- Within the Korean market, valuations have become increasingly compelling. Excluding the two largest memory stocks, the market is now trading below 7x forward P/E, the lowest level in the past decade. This comes despite broad-based earnings upgrades across most sectors during 2H26, with utilities being the primary exception. Market breadth has also deteriorated significantly, with more than 80% of KOSPI constituents down over 20% from their recent highs and more than 40% down over 40%. As over 70% of KOSPI stocks are now trading below book value, valuation compression has become widespread beyond the semiconductor sector.

- From a positioning perspective, corporate buybacks have been the only meaningful source of inflows in recent weeks, while all major investor groups have been net sellers. Foreign investors have led year-to-date outflows, primarily driven by selling in the two largest memory stocks. Consequently, foreign ownership in the semiconductor sector has fallen to approximately -2.5 standard deviations relative to its historical range. Foreign ownership in the KOSPI excluding Samsung Electronics and SK Hynix has also declined below its long-term average. Retail investor positioning remains subdued as well. Retail ownership continues to track below historical averages following recent outflows. Margin loan balances remain below the June peak, while margin loans as a percentage of market capitalization stand at roughly 0.6%, reflecting the still-elevated market cap base. Meanwhile, leveraged ETF assets under management have fallen to levels last seen during the Iran war-related market drawdown in March. Trading activity in leveraged ETFs has nearly collapsed following the introduction of new regulations in July, further highlighting the lack of speculative positioning in the market.
