TOPIX Next-Generation Review: Broad Reshuffle, Significant Flow Implications

What happened? JPX announced the results of the first periodic TOPIX review under the next-generation framework after market close on 7 October. Effective from the 30 October open (to be implemented at the 29 October close), the review adds 35 Standard and Growth Market stocks, designates 683 existing constituents as transition names subject to further eligibility review, and changes the free-float weight (FFW) or liquidity factor for over 450 non-transition constituents.

The additions will enter at 75% of their standard FFW, rising to 100% in October 2028. Transition-name weights will decline over eight quarterly stages through July 2028, starting at a 0.875 transition factor in October and falling by 0.125 per quarter thereafter. JPX will re-evaluate transition names in October 2027: qualifying names will stabilize at a 0.50 transition factor, while non-qualifying names will continue toward removal. The second periodic review is scheduled for October 2028, with annual reviews thereafter.

Separately, JPX announced on 10 July that Kioxia's FFW will increase from 0.15 to 0.50, with implementation split across end-October and end-November.

Why it matters. The review marks TOPIX's transition from a market-section-derived benchmark to a more rules-based, investable index spanning the Prime, Standard and Growth markets. Constituent selection is based on an annual traded-value ratio and cumulative free-float-adjusted market capitalization, while more permissive continuation criteria are intended to limit turnover. The October 2027 re-evaluation also introduces a new corporate-action catalyst for transition names, incentivizing companies to improve trading liquidity, increase investable free float, enhance market valuation and strengthen shareholder returns to maintain TOPIX eligibility.

Index implications. Following the review, the number of TOPIX constituents will increase from 1,634 to 1,669 at end-October before declining to a minimum of 986 by July 2028, subject to names retaining eligibility through the October 2027 re-evaluation.

On a pro forma basis, we estimate TOPIX free-float market capitalization will increase from US$4.89tn currently to US$5.01tn at end-October, before declining to US$4.98tn upon full implementation, reflecting the combined impact of new additions, FFW/liquidity-factor changes and transition-factor reductions. Overall, approximately 3.0% of TOPIX weight will be adjusted at end-October, rising to ~4.0% cumulatively upon full implementation.

Based on current share prices and consensus estimates, upon full implementation,

TOPIX forward 12-month P/E is expected to decline from 15.5x to 15.0x, while 2027-28 EPS CAGR increases from 11.4% to 12.3%. Trailing dividend yield is expected to decline modestly from 2.1% to 2.0%. (Exhibit 1)

Flow implications. We estimate the end-October rebalance will generate ~US$62bn of gross two-way passive flows, rising to a cumulative US$82.5bn upon full implementation based on current prices. (Exhibit 3)

At end-October, Tech Hardware & Semis (+US$5.7bn, primarily driven by Kioxia) are expected to see the largest passive inflows, followed by Autos and Consumer Retail (+US$330-400mn each). By contrast, Banks (-US$3.3bn) are likely to face the largest passive outflows, followed by Insurance/Fins Services and Consumer Staples (-US$1.0-1.4bn each), and Mining, Capital Goods and Chemicals (-US$330-510mn each).

Stock performance. Additions have generally outperformed transition stocks ahead of announcement, before relative performance reversed on the first trading day post-announcement (Exhibit 2). We highlight stocks with the most significant passive-flow implications (Exhibit 4 and Exhibit 5).
