Sanhua: Solid 1H26; Material progress in robotics

Sanhua reported 1H26 results with both revenue and earnings broadly in line with our expectations (Exhibit 1). Encouragingly, gross margin remained resilient at 28%, while operating margin was pressured by higher foreign exchange losses (Exhibit 7) and fair value losses on securities investments. Management maintained its FY26 net profit growth target of 15% YoY unchanged. Our updated model is available here.

In 2Q26, Sanhua's HVAC and automotive segment revenue grew ~7% YoY and ~6% YoY, respectively. The HVAC business outperformed the downstream air-conditioning industry (~9% YoY in 2Q), which management attributed primarily to strong liquid-cooling demand (>50% YoY), rising content value per unit driven by downstream product upgrades, and expansion into other home appliance categories. In 1H26, liquid-cooling solutions for data centers contributed RMB0.8-1.0bn of revenue (8-10% of HVAC segment revenue). According to ChinalOL's air-conditioner production plans (Exhibit 9), total air-conditioner sales volumes (China domestic + export) could decline by ~16% YoY in 3Q26, before rebounding sharply in 4Q26 (+14% YoY in Oct-Nov).

For its humanoid robotics business, management noted that the company's actuators have received positive customer feedback, with core products steadily ramping up volume shipments and production capacity. Management also indicated that the customer currently has no specific requirements regarding production location, as supply reliability remains the top priority. Nevertheless, the company remains prepared to support any future manufacturing relocation.

Investment Implications

Reiterate MP. We maintain our DCF-based PT of CNY 39 and HKD 27 unchanged. The TP implies a 35x forward PE at end-2026.
