Concrete improvement in fundamentals in sight

Solid SiPh demand and future opportunities; baseline business benefiting from AI ripple effect; upgrade to Buy

Upgrade to Buy on increased progress in SiPh and potential DDIC backend reshuffles, with a new TP of TWD270, implying 43% upside

We were encouraged by Chipbond's efforts to utilize its idle bumping capacity and make inroads into silicon photonics (SiPh) but did not upgrade the stock as we assumed that the market has likely priced in much more than it would deliver (report). Beside the reset in the market sentiment (share price -38% from the peak in late May vs. TAIEX +3%), we see increased progress in Chipbond's bumping services in SiPh and that its baseline DDIC business could enjoy the "AI ripple effect" given a Korean DDIC vendor's supply chain reshuffle. We lift our 2026/27/28F EPS from TWD4.55/5.71/ 6.70 to TWD5.77/9.04/10.60 (Fig. 2). We upgrade Chipbond to Buy from Neutral and raise TP to TWD270 (from TWD171), which is based on 30x (unchanged) 2027F EPS of TWD9.04, at the high end of the company's historical band (Fig. 4) to capture the diversification into SiPh. Chipbond currently trades at 21x 2027F EPS. Downside risks are softer-than-expected optical communication demand and slower new project ramp-up.

TIA bumping remains the major driver in SiPh; TFLN engagement worth watching

While the addressable segments of Chipbond's gold bumping include transimpedance amplifier (TIA), photodetector (PD), driver and modulator, we believe so far only TIA and PD are in production, and most of Chipbond's SiPh revenue comes from 200G TIA bumping due to a larger die size than PD, with tie-ups with most of the major North American vendors. We estimate Chipbond's SiPh revenue to grow 110%/70% in 2027-28F and contribute low-/high-teens of revenue vs. c.6% in 2026F; thus, a more significant mix benefit could support GM growth to 32.7%/34.4% in 2027-28F from 29.4% in 2026F. Additionally, we believe Chipbond's backend collaboration with UMC (2303 TT, Buy) in thin-film lithium niobate (TFLN) modulator production is worth watching given a much larger die size.

Share gain in LDDI backend might mitigate some device unit pressure

We expect Chipbond's revenue growth to moderate in 4Q26F after +14% q-q growth in 3Q26F on a N American handset brand's seasonal demand and SiPh resilience given continued PC/ Android demand headwinds to Chipbond's baseline DDIC business (~80% of current revenue). However, we noted before that a Korea DDIC vendor could engage with UMC due to the company's captive fab partner's likely 8" capacity offloading amidst resource constraints (report). The capacity optimization might cover more than fabrication but also gold bumping, and we think Chipbond could thus have the opportunity to gain LDDI backend share from 2027F in the earliest.

Company profile

Chipbond is one of the world's leading DDI OSAT players. Established in 1997, Chipbond specialises in providing display driver and radio-frequency semiconductor packaging and testing services.

Valuation Methodology

Our TP of TWD270 is based on 30x 2027F EPS. Our target P/E of 30x is at the high end of the historical P/E range. TAIEX is the benchmark index.

Risks that may impede the achievement of the target price

Downside risks: 1) Softer-than-expected silicon photonic demand or fiercer competition, 2) slower-than-expected smartphone and TV demand, 3) weaker-than-expected COF/tape demand.

ESG

Chipbond manages its corporate social responsibility by focusing on five dimensions: corporate governance, workplace of well-being, environmental and sustainable development, customer service and supplier management, and social participation. The company sets water-saving milestones and establishes low-carbon plants in practice.
